Nome Alaska State Trooper post has new Sergeant

Bv Diana Haecker

With the promotion of Alaska State Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill to a Lieutenant's position and the post of the Deputy Commander of the Trooper's C Detachment, a new Sergeant is about to head up the Nome

Alaska State Trooper post in Nome. Being new to the post, however, does not mean he's new to the community. Sgt. Charlie Cross was born in Nome and raised in Nome and Kotzebue as well as having spent a lot of years in Elim. He said he spent his formative years in Anchorage. "It's been a long time coming to get back to Nome," said Cross about his promotion and return to the Seward Peninsula. "I tried twice before and finally the Lieutenant [Merrill] decided to promote and move along and it was exactly the right time for me. Coming back to Nome was something I wanted for 13 years since I joined the Troopers," Cross said. Most recently Cross worked as a supervisor at the Western Alaska Alcohol and Narcotics team in Anchorage.

Prior to that he was supervisor of the major offenders unit in Anchorage. Cross had an interest in law enforcement since early childhood. His father was in the National Guard and the younger Cross' career options involved a career in the military. "But strangely enough, my father talked me out of it," Cross said.

By the time Cross attended college in Fairbanks, he ran into former Nome Trooper Sgt. Brian Wassmann, which gave the impetus to get Cross' career as a Trooper started. In 1998 Cross was hired on by the Dept. of Public Safety and he went to the training academy in Sitka. His first post as a Trooper was in Fairbanks, where he served for two years as a patrol Trooper. Then he transferred to Kodiak and worked as a Trooper for three years and then as a Alaska Wildlife Trooper for two years. After that, he transferred to Anchorage where he was a drug and alcohol investigator for four years, working as a supervisor for two years. "Yes, blue shirt, brown shirt, t-shirt, and now back to blue shirt," joked Cross, referring to the different color uniforms associated with Troopers, Wildlife Troopers and investigators who wear plain clothes. "I'm coming back to the area that I know and back to patrol, which is something I really enjoy," Cross said.

"I think the perspective I bring is good because from growing up in Elim, Nome and Kotzebue I did see what wonderful life rural Alaska has to offer, but at the same time I saw the tragedies that come with substance abuse, primarily alcohol abuse," Cross said.

Knowing first hand how the alcohol abuse, the importation and the people who are making bootlegging their livelihood are detrimental to the entire region, Cross is adamant in the effort to make a difference. "What the last six years have brought to light for me is the tragedies," Cross said. He said it was enlightening to him to see to what extent people are going to conceal alcohol for importation and going against the will of having a local option community, which was voted on by the people, not imposed by outside government.

Thoughts on the relationships to local authorities? Cross said he would like to build on former Sgt. Merrill's efforts to foster good relationships in the outlying communiweek, it's a Nomeite, who embarks on the adventure of a lifetime. Megan Hahn, daughter of Pat Hahn and Sue Greenly, is about to fulfill her dream of biking the entire 8,000mile long route from Portland, Oregon to the end of the road at a town called Ushuaia at the southernmost tip of Argentina. Hahn, 24, is about to graduate this May from the University of Alaska at Fairbanks as a Bachelor of Arts and Music – with concentration on the clarinet.

The thought of biking the entire length of the North and South American continents germinated a year ago, when a friend of hers invited her to bike the Oregon coast. "I had the idea that I should keep on going south," Hahn said. She has been planning her entire trip in earnest since last October and drew inspiration from friends who had biked from Alaska to Argentina. There is no noble cause or charity attached to her courageous trip that will take her through unfamiliar territory and politically unstable countries in Central America. Asked why she is embarking on the trip, she said, "Because I can." But then she adds, "I have never done anything like this before and probably won't have another opportunity to do so." Hahn said that she had saved up money for quite a while to afford the trip.

She said that she's in the early stages of learning Spanish from a couple of books and although she does have doubts, she's going to follow through on the trip anyway. "From the bikers I had talked to, nothing horrible had happened," she said. Hahn plans to bike 50 miles a day on a bike that she had used to commute with in Fairbanks. She said she will replace everything on it but the frame. "I'll bring spare parts and a few tools with me in hopes that I'll

Operation Arctic Care providers fan out to Bering Strait and Norton Sound villages

By Diana Haecker

Hundreds of people dressed in military camouflage uniforms were seen in Nome last week as the Alaska National Guard along with its military partners readies to dispatch health care and veterinary professionals out to the 16 communities of Norton Sound and the Bering Strait for Operation Arctic Care 2012.

Arctic Care, now in its 18th year, is considered the largest joint military medical readiness and logistics training exercise for the military, targeting different areas of rural Alaska each year. About 250 health care professionals and support staff provide medical care to underserved populations in rural Alaska. The exercise started on April 9 as advance teams swarmed out to the villages to set up appointments, with the health care providers and veterinarians to follow on April 11. The teams provide acute and chronic medical care, dental care, eye exams and veterinary care. Every resident of the area is eligible for the free care given.

ation Arctic Care 2012, told The Nome Nugget that the services include medical and wellness exams, chronic disease management, acute care as well as school and fire fighter exams. Lange said that they also bring dental teams into all villages except for Shishmaref, Unalakleet, Golovin and White Mountain. The optometry teams will conduct eye exams and will be able to fabricate glasses in Nome and have them sent to the villages. Veterinary services include vaccinations, spays and neutering as well as regular dog and cat exams. Depending on which village they go to, there are going to be 14 to 25 people in one team.

Lange explained that moving up to 150,000 pounds of food, medical supplies and equipment into each village gives the military the opportunity to conduct deployment training in a non-threatening environment. "This allows our military medical professionals the opportunity to conduct remote medicine, deploy supplies and perform medical outreach operations," Lange said. Some doctors and health care providers have been in the region before, but for most, the trip to northwestern Alaska is the first. "The providers are mostly from the Lower 48 and come from active duty Air Force, the Navy Reserve. Army Reserve, the Army Guard and the Air National Guard," said Lange.

Pattie Lillie with the Norton Sound Health Corporation has helped to line up logistics for the operation. Lillie has coordinated with village clinics and said the exercise is important to the health of village residents. "The direct medical care that will be provided by the doctors and nurses is usually unavailable in the villages," Lillie said. "The way our system works, health aides and mid-level providers see patients in the village and treat to the degree they can, and anything beyond their scope is referred to Nome or Anchorage. We are not able to provide doctors in every village, so having a doctor on site for even four or five days can make a difference to our pa-only have minor repairs to deal with," she said. The 24-year-old will take about 50 pounds of gear, food and a tent.

Hahn said that aside from the experience of a lifetime, she hopes to refine the virtue of patience. "I traveled to Germany as an exchange student and that really tried my patience," she said.

The Hahn's wanderlust is multigenerational as her grandmother Bonnie Hahn sailed the Northwest Passage as did her father Pat and uncle Ken – albeit at different times. Nomeites can stay in touch with her adventures by following Megan's Seasonal Affective Disorder: More than the winter blues.

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Most people in rural Alaska experience some degree of fluctuation in their moods during the winter months.

In most cases, these seasonal emotional fluctuations are a normal part of life in the Arctic and Subarctic.

But for some people, seasonal emotional swings can be debilitating, often mimicking the symptoms of severe depression. Doctors call the recurrent form of seasonal depression the seasonal affective disorder (SAD).

Sometimes people confuse SAD with the wintertime blues or "cabin fever." But SAD is more dangerous than the symptoms of cabin fever. Cabin fever is merely a form of physical and mental restlessness that occurs during prolonged periods of being confined indoors due to bad weather or e x t r e m eALASKA cold. Most mental FAMILY health professionals DOCTOR would say that cabin fever is a natural response to a confined environment.

SAD, on the other hand, is a mental health disorder thought to result from an exaggerated or inappropriate reaction to changes in the season or a seasonal reduction in sunlight exposure. Most often SAD symptoms are worse during the long dark winter months, though some people experience symptoms during other seasons. Unlike cabin fever, resuming outdoor activities does not easily cure SAD.

Similar to other forms of depression, SAD symptoms may lead to absence from work, poor school performance, weight gain, or a general withdrawal from activity. Substance abuse with alcohol, tobacco, illicit drugs, or pain medications increases with SAD. And at its worst, SAD leads to suicidal ideation.

For several decades, researchers have recognized "light therapy" as a primary treatment for SAD. Exposure to light from a SAD light box for 30 minutes each morning is thought to reset the body's natural sleep-wake cycle (circadian rhythm) and balance chemicals in the brain like melatonin and serotonin that affect mood.

Daily exercise and a nutritious diet rich in Omega-3 fatty acids (fish oils and nuts) is also considered a mainstay of treatment.

More extensive cases of SAD may require psychotherapy, specialized counseling, or medication. Often doctors prescribe a class of antidepressants for SAD called selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors that may be taken through the fall and winter months.

A medical evaluation is often helpful for people who have symptoms of the seasonal affective disorder (SAD). There are no specific tests for SAD, but lab work is often performed because many other medical problems mimic SAD.

Vitamin D deficiency, anemia (a low hemoglobin level), thyroid problems, autoimmune diseases, sleep apnea, and lack of quality sleep can cause symptoms similar to the seasonal affective disorder. Doctors will often do tests to rule out these types of diseases before diagnosing a person and treating them for SAD.

Consider speaking with your doctor about options available to you for evaluation and treatment of SAD if vou or a family member has recurrent symptoms of depression at the same time each year.

Holy Cross files to recall City Council

Holy Cross, Alaska - The Concerned Citizens of Holy Cross, a group of local residents, have filed paperwork to recall the Holy Cross City Council for failure to perform prescribed duties and misconduct in office.

The Council cancelled the regular election last October without explanation, said Bruce and Connie Werba, members of the Concerned Citizens. At the City's regular meeting in January, an election was "scheduled for February 29, 2012, but it, too was cancelled at the last minute," they said. Kathy Chase, another concerned citizen, has also reported that an election has again been scheduled to occur April 17th, but states, "who knows if it will actually happen." The Concerned Citizens filed applications to recall each member of the Council last month, but are still waiting for a response from the City.

Jeffrey Demientieff, also a member of the group, said that the Council has for many years failed to hold regular monthly meetings, give public notice of their meetings, or keep records of their meetings as required by law. "I filed a public records request just for a copy of the City Code and the minutes for their meetings, but haven't heard anything,"

None of the Council members have filed mandatory reports of their financial and business interests, the group said. Additionally, they said the Council has failed to provide workmen's compensation insurance to City employees and has allowed numerous bad checks to be issued to employees and local vendors. Demientieff added that it also appears that Mayor Rebecca Demientieff and Council member Kristi Turner participated in the apparent forgery of the minutes for a Council meeting regarding a State grant application. "Both versions of those minutes list people, including other Council members, who say they weren't there that day.'

The group is urging the City to act on their recall applications. "It's reached the point where folks deserve the chance for a clean sweep and a fresh start on the Council," the Werbas' said. "It's been over six months since we were supposed to have voted. The City government has been basically broken for too long, and we need a change.'

Hard to believe, but this young pretty chick ain't a spring chicken anymore. Still pretty though!

Happy 50th to Donna Erickson!

Small Business Development

Starting your own business is no easy task. Doing so in rural Alaska can be even more daunting.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation (NSEDC) understands these challenges and is ready to continue its efforts to help budding or growing business owners with its fifth annual Small Business Initiative (SBI).

The SBI is a competitive grant program designed to spur economic development and employment opportunities within the Norton Sound region. Now in its fifth year, the Small Business Initiative has already awarded $420,000 to 21 business ventures throughout NSEDC's 15 member communities. The program is patterned after the highly successful Alaska Federation of Natives' Alaska Marketplace statewide com-

NSEDC opens its application period on April 11 and will accept completed applications through July 16, 2012. The program is open to residents of NSEDC member communities and applications can be found at www.nsedc.com, at NSEDC offices or through NSEDC Community Outreach Liaisons starting April 11.

Once the application period closes, an independent panel of judges whittles the entries down to a handful of finalists who then present their business plans to the panel in person in the late summer/early fall. The judges may award grants up to $35,000 to each grant recipient.

BSNC Board of Directors issues one-time elder dividend

Acknowledging the importance of the region's elders, the Board of Directors of the Bering Straits Native Corporation has voted to issue a one-time special dividend of $500 to all qualifying elders. The resolution was passed last Saturday at the BSNC board meeting in Nome.

Eligible shareholders are those who are 65 years of age or older who were issued 100 shares of Settlement Common Stock in Bering Straits Native Corporation as part of the original issuance of such shares by the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, which was signed into law in 1971.

"This is an important step to recognize the contributions of our elders and show our appreciation for their support during difficult financial times in the past," said BSNC Board Chairman Henry Ivanoff.

In Loving Memory

Clyde Kirk Ongtowasruk Sr. died March 15, 2012. He was born to Clarence and Faye Ongtowasruk on October 20, 1960 in Wales. As a young boy his family received reindeer. He would follow his brothers Norman and Frank to get the reindeer herd. He told stories of how he was told by his father to go get the herd. He would be afraid and wonder how he could do that on foot so he did a lot of running, especially to get around the big ponds or beat the reindeer to the ponds and herd them back to camp.

His family did a lot of camping while herding the reindeer because of having to walk - there were no four wheeler or snowmobiles. He told stories about walking from Mint River driving the reindeer to the corral at Lopp Lagoon, and walking from Singoruk to return to Wales to attend the 4th of July activities with his brother and cousins. Up until his death he always enjoyed reindeer herding. He lived a subsistence lifestyle mostly dependent on reindeer. But he also hunted for walrus, whale, ducks, seals, wolverines, wolves and polar bears. He gathered greens and berries.

He graduated from Shishmaref

High School, in May of 1979. He worked as a Quality Control Inspector at an electronics manufacturer in Silicone Valley, California. He then moved back to Wales and continued helping with reindeer herding.

In the summer of 1982 he met his wife Michele, they had been together for almost 30 years and happily married for 22 of those years. He helped raise all five of his children, and really wanted to be there for his son Nikolai who was adopted out and wished to have raised him, like he did his other children, but loved him just as much. He wished he could see him at least one more time before he died.

He loved and cared for seven grandchildren and was getting ready for the eighth grandchild, like they were his own. He worked as an ABE tutor, a janitor for the Dome building, worked as a supervisor, laborer in various seasonal jobs that became available. He served on the SAR team, City Council, and the IRA Council with commitment to the people of Wales. He was always thinking of the youth, encouraging them to graduate from school and telling them to "keep it up, don't ever stop trying."

He loved his fresh air.

Is Financial Literacy Low?

During Financial Literacy Month in April, Better Business Bureau reminds consumers to keep track of their credit, debt and sensitive financial documents.

The National Foundation for Credit Counseling says that most Americans are not up-to-date on their credit standing. According to the NFCC's 2011 Consumer Financial Literacy Survey Final Report:

- 65 percent have not obtained yearly credit reports within the last 12 months;
- 63 percent have not requested credit scores.
- Of those that have not checked credit histories:
- 43 percent say they do not think it is useful or do not plan to apply for new credit;
- 22 percent do not believe they have any credit history to review.

The same study finds that millions of Americans carry credit card debt month-to-month and 28 percent admit to not paying bills on time; seven percent currently have debts in collection.

met in Nome while I was there. Thanks to Wally for all the trouble I seem to give him, quyanna-buk. Thank you Pat for telling me that you push the areas you ache at toward that ache, that way it shortens the muscle, then hold it that way for at least 90 seconds. I still swear by stinkweed, I wish I had some. It's been a slow recovery.

Although I do appreciate their putting us up at the Hostel, the water for the showers was barely warm. Fastest shower I ever took. I think there are a great many of us who would appreciate it if they turned it up a little hotter. It is a nice place to stay, although the food could be a little better. I really did appreciate it though, and it is a nice place. Best thing about it is it will be right next to the new hospital. Quyanna for everything you did for my cousin and I.

It was really good to see some of my friends too. I'm glad to see you all looking well. Don't forget to give my other buddies a hug for me.

I just got home and already I am crying. It saddens me that no matter how much I say thank you to my son for having to do this or that because it's a part of an everyday thing—a part of life. I told him that I am not the only one who appreciates what he does, that other people appreciate it too. So he has decided that he will not do anything his mother says. I keep trying to tell him he can go to college or vocational training. That he can take up whatever he'd like to become, that there is help in scholarships and my son is very smart I'd say.

If I were to talk back to my parents, I would get punished. I told him in my day we had to do twice the things he does. At least he has sisters to share the different things that need being done. Heck I'd be happy for that. I know I was and I will miss seeing my sister again, just as I do my best friend, but life goes

Another stressor I have had is my youngest daughter resenting me, because about a year and a half ago one of her friends said I didn't love her, which totally isn't true. Then her out-of-town friends keep bugging her to either move or visit them

Correctional Center where he was remanded to custody. There was no bail set for this offense as it is a domestic violence offense.

On 4-8 at 22:55 p.m., Nome Police responded to a reported disturbance. for an outrageous amount of time. But all I can do is tell my kids I love them, so I do that as many times a day as I could, because they are precious to me. I would not wish to be the person to hurt my kids, because I think I would go berserk if something happened to one of them. And they already call me crazy because I must say my peace of mind.

As for GCI. I am terribly disappointed with them. They might say AT&T was rated as one of the lowest. I tell you what—I'd rather have AT&T, can't wait until they get here. There are five of us here in my family at the moment and one of them is away at Mt. Edgecumbe, so instead of having a house phone my kids talked me into cell phones. Then they talked me into doing Nationwide, Unlimited, of which GCI said would cost a total of $232-yeah right. So far it cost over $300 a month, some times $400 and because we were not able to pay for a month and a half, because of the holidays, they cut us off. So, we called up GCI to see how much we owed, so we could get our phones turned on. They said not possible. I don't see why not, we were willing to continue to pay for the $300+ whatever it is per month.

So I guess they lost that revenue, oh well. Not only that, but they still want to charge me the $127—early disconnect fee on every phone. Do vou know that GCI charges you for the 800 calls you make? Along with 411 calls. Probably along with the other GCI numbers of the other companies that GCI bought out. Can't seem to get a hold of the AT&T numbers with GCI phones though. I bet you anything they charge you even if you don't get hold of your party. Much less, even though they say you don't get charged for calling within your town, they probably take and add those to your minutes. So much for free, or low, this or that as they say. I'm just glad that I don't disappoint as many people s they do. And maybe AT&T wouldn't drop as many phone calls as GCI seems to.

Tell me why-because I really would like to know-are we Alaskans having to pay such outrageous price for oil and gas? I thought we have our own oil pipeline. What about our own refinery? Here in Unalakleet we are now paying $6.57 a gallon, and that's cheaper than other places. We need to stand up for our rights and tell our legislators that we want the pipeline set up going across Alaska, with substations in places like Galena, Unalakleet, Koyuk or Golovin, Nome, and on up to the Kotzebue, Barrow area. Along with a bigger refinery and an instantaneous fuel spill recovery plan. Not only would that create jobs, but also it would lead us to becoming a stronger nation, able to help ourselves and others - along with future generations.

It greatly upsets me too, I keep trying to tell the kids of my son's generation that they can go to school for free—at the moment and take up whichever career they want to become. And yet they would rather stay at home, and be bums and keep getting into trouble—no matter how much I bug them about it. Then all I could do is give them a hug and say port and safe harbor construction in the Alaskan Arctic. It would be valuable for the state to convene an industry-focused Alaska Arctic Ports Workshop to assess the pros and cons of alternative locations and types of ports, address environmental conditions and engineering approaches, and explore funding alternatives.

4. Support search and rescue coordination centers along the coast to assist federal, state, and local respon-

The ANWTF supports search and rescue efforts at all levels - federal, state, and local. Because the USCG doesn't yet have a complete Arctic presence, local communities are often the first responders to an emergency.

The state of Alaska should coordinate planning with the USCG and local communities to develop strategies for increased search and rescue capabilities in the Arctic. Strategies may include purchase of equipment, training, and increased communications capability at the community level.

Other countries are already moving ahead with similar initiatives.

Furthermore, on May 12, 2011 in the Arctic Council formalized a search and rescue agreement that coordinates international SAR response in the Arctic and establishes the geographical area of SAR responsibility for each of the eight Arctic nations. The state should work with the federal government to ensure SAR cooperation with Russia and Canada.

Russia is currently in the process of building 10 search and rescue centers along its Arctic coastline - the first one is slated for completion this August. Given the size of the Alaskan Arctic, effective local response will be critical. Let's begin State planning immediately.

A number of valuable state initiatives are underway to look at the potential needs and feasibility of infrastructure projects in Alaska's Arctic region. These include, at a minimum, the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities' Industrial Use Roads Study and several Arctic Ports studies. We applaud these efforts and encourage them to move forward expeditiously.

Obviously, this is just a partial list of infrastructure investment needs for Alaska to take advantage of the economic opportunities the melting Arctic waters present. Roads, airports, and many other maritime and terrestrial assets are critically needed. It will also be important to consider climate change when planning future infrastructure investment in Alaska's Arctic. Fluctuations in temperature and precipitation will have implications for both existing facilities and future construction.

It's clear to us that Alaska must embrace its Arctic destiny and, in partnering with the federal government, industry, and local Arctic communities, make the tough infrastructure investment decisions that will provide a basis for continued economic opportunity for the next century and beyond.

Bob Herron (D-Bethel) has represented House District 38, the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta, in the Alaska Legislature since 2008. A member of the Northern Waters Task Force, Rep. Herron last Session sponsored HJR 15, supporting the Arcitic Caucus; and this Session is sponsoring HJR 34, asking Congress to fund icebreakers and a Coast Guard Arctic base.

Researchers continue to seek cause of seal disease

USGS finds polar bears with hair loss and skin lesions

By Diana Haecker

During their annual spring fieldwork season that began a few weeks ago, United States Geological Survey researchers so far found 11 polar bears in the Southern Beaufort Sea that showed signs of hair loss and skin lesions. The news sounds alarming considering that an Unusual Mortality Event investigation is ongoing in order to find the cause of a disease that befell ice seals and possibly wal-

The symptoms sound similar: afflicted seals show hair loss, oozing skin lesions and open sores, and also appear lethargic. However, agencies involved in the management of polar bears are cautioning that there is too little information available to determine whether or not the polar bears are suffering from the same mysterious disease that befell the ice seals.

Nome's Jack Omelak with the Alaska Nanuuq Commission told The Nome Nugget that the afflicted polar bears have been found in the Southern Beaufort Sea – a different population from the Chukchi Sea population. As of Monday, April 9, 11 out of 42 captured polar bears showed hair loss and some kind of skin condition. Omelak said that this number is considered a too small a sample size to jump to conclusions. "The USGS will continue its fieldwork and have recently begun capturing bears near Kaktovik. If these trends continue within a larger sample size and area, the agencies involved will coordinate a response plan," Omelak said.

The Alaska Nanuuq Commission co-manages Alaska's two polar bear populations with the North Slope Borough and the US Fish and Wildlife Service. The ANC said in a statement that as of yet, there are no health concerns for humans handling these polar bears. Although there have been several bears taken near local villages, hunters have not reported any symptoms of alopecia, or hair loss, within the Chukchi Sea stock of polar bears. The North Slope Borough also have not received any reports of hunters saying that these symptoms were seen in polar bears. Near Barrow, three bears were observed through a spotting scope showing skin condition symptoms within the last week. None of the agencies involved have issued any alerts to subsistence users of polar

According to the USGS, the polar bears were captured near Barrow and the researchers have moved eastward to Kaktovik to continue their fieldwork, which will conclude at Prudhoe Bay in May. The bears, USGS scientists say, appeared otherwise healthy in appearance and behavior. In a letter dated March 23 to the NOAA marine mammal health and stranding program, a USGS researcher informed NOAA of their discovery. Up to that date, they found two polar bears showing alopecia, a Greek word for hair loss at the head or body.

The researchers captured one male and one female bear, with the male being in worse condition than the female. The male had oozing sores and hair loss around the neck and the head. Otherwise, they say, he was in good condition. The female had hair loss, but it seemed that she was recovering from the disease. The scientists took skin biopsy, blood and tissue samples of the bears.

Tony DeGange, chief of the Biology Office at USGS Alaska Science Center, said that the USGS works with the UME researchers to make sure that they take similar samples, using similar methods. Aleria Jensen, Marine Mammal Stranded Network coordinator and UME off-site coordinator with NOAA Fisheries confirmed that the polar bear samples are send to the same labs where seal samples have been sent.

Raphaela Stimmelmayr, wildlife veterinarian and research biologist with the North Slope Borough, and the onsite coordinator for the UME investigation, said in an email correspondence with The Nugget that the USGS scientists are investigating in collaboration with the UME whether there is a relationship to the seal disease. "At the moment we do not have enough evidence to rule in or out that there is a relationship between the polar bear skin condition and seal/walrus skin condition. USGS has seen this or something similar in a few polar bears before," Stimmelmayr wrote.

DeGange confirms that the hair loss is nothing new. USGS has been studying the Southern Beaufort Sea polar bear population since 1984. In the course of this work, they have encountered a small number of bears with alopecia at various times.

In the winter of 1998/1999, 10 of 48 captured polar bears showed hair loss and although pathology research was done, the cause was never discovered. In the years between 2001 and 2008, the researchers found 15 bears with hair loss. "What makes the spike in frequency this year so interesting is the co-occurrence with the ongoing unexplained mortality event in Arctic ice seals," wrote De-Gange. "Affected seals also have shown skin lesions. We do not know if the cause is the same between bears and seals, but such a link is very intriguing, especially because bears eat seals. But we do not have the information yet to link the two."

Last summer an unusual number of ringed seals hauled out on beaches along the Arctic coast of Alaska. Through the fall, hunters reported dead and dying seals with hair loss and skin sores, which led to declaration of an Unusual Mortality Event by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration on December 20, 2011.

Based on observations of Pacific walruses with similar skin lesions at a coastal haulout in the same region during fall, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service joined the UME investigation. Most walruses showing skin lesions appeared to be otherwise healthy, and whether the symptoms observed in the seals and walruses are related is unknown.

Spotted, ringed and bearded seals have been found with similar symptoms spanning a huge region from Canada to Russia and all the way south to Japan. The latest discovery was a seal pup that was found near Yakutat and investigation revealed that it was a ribbon seal.

Aleria Jensen said that the UME investigation has still no answers as to the cause of the disease affecting the ice seals. Just last week, however. the federal government awarded a $92,000 Prescott emergency grant to the University of Alaska at Anchorage to cover costs of sending out samples, for lead pathologist Dr. Kathy Burek's time and potentially another veterinarian to support the investigation, for the purchase of an ultra-cold freezer for sample storage and carcass transport costs, among other things.

Jensen said that so far funds to pay for the UME investigation have been fronted by the North Slope Borough, partially out of general stranding network funds and some laboratory work has been done pro bono.

Yet the various tests have not yielded results that could point researchers in the right direction. "We have exhausted standard viral tests," said Jensen. "But there is the suspicion or the possibility that there could be a new virus involved," said Jensen.

UME researchers are hoping that the Columbia University's viral discovery laboratory, a cutting edge scientific lab discovering new viruses, would yield the answer to their questions. Testing for radionuclides is still underway with the final results anticipated in May.

A preliminary report said that radionuclides were not found in the seal samples.

Asked if the UME investigation is handled differently given that the seal disease is affecting an important food source in Native subsistence cultures, Jensen said that this UME investigation is set apart by the vast network and communication structure that is involved in gaining information and disseminating it.

"The broad network of folks working on this is quite unique," she said. Involved are various regional. state and federal agencies as well as the Ice Seal Committee and the Eskimo Walrus Commission. Jensen said that hunters were driving the investigation as they first alerted the authorities and then delivered the carcasses from as far as Little Diomede to the pathologist's necropsy table. "We try to get information back to the communities," said Jensen.

Austin Ahmasuk, a Nome hunter and temporary representative on the Ice Seal Committee, said that he's not very impressed how the outreach to locals is being handled. "Spring hunting season is here and yet we have received little information to help us understand the disease," said Ahmasuk.

He said he was frustrated that only limited news had trickled down to the hunters who diligently reported observations and delivered the carcasses in the first place. If the researchers found some evidence of infections, he would like to know what to look for in the bodies of seals as they are butchered for consumption.

However, Ahmasuk also said that he observes plenty of healthy seals out there and that he yet has to find a sick one. "I sincerely hope that they are doing fine and that the cause of the disease will be discovered," he said.

In the meantime, scientists working on the UME as well as polar bear researchers ask anyone observing or harvesting a seal, walrus or polar bear with fur loss or skin sores to report their sightings.

Rock Creek Dam breached

Phase I of Rock Creek mine closure is underway

By Diana Haecker

While the ultimate fate of the failed Rock Creek gold mine is still unknown – whether it will close for good or will find new owners work on the first phase of the reclamation plan has begun. The tailings fully breached and that he is coming facility dam has been breached and where once the toe of the massive dam was gapes a gigantic V-cut. The State's Dam Safety Engineer Charlie Cobb said that the dam has been out on Thursday, April 19 to inspect the work.

The mine has been in care and maintenance status since November 2008 and has operated according to terms of a temporary closure plan dated April 2010. Cobb said that part of that plan was to decommission the tailings facility dam if the mine is not restarted within three years. The time is up now. The mine hasn't been restarted and last year NovaGold's board of directors decided to get rid of their investment in Nome in order to concentrate on the development of the Donlin Creek gold mine.

Since the temporary closure, the mine's caretakers had to battle with large amounts of water that accumulated behind the TSF dam, requiring AGC to pump the water out, treat it and pump it back into the earth through their injection wells. "Water behind a dam makes it dangerous," said Cobb. "My concern was that the system was safe.'

Cobb said that the breach now allows for water to flow freely. He said that diversion channels have been built above the cut to channel the water toward the breach. Below the cut is a sediment lake to filter out the muck and the water then is allowed to flow into Rock Creek. The closure plan says that storm water management practices, including use of best management practices, will be implemented to limit erosion and associated sediment loadings during break-up.

On site, in the white expanse of the idyllic Snake River Valley the silence is disrupted by the sound of heavy equipment moving massive amounts of gravel and soil around. Since the mine only operated for a

Legislature fails to increase PCE energy assistance

By Sandra L. Medearis

An increase in power cost assistance for rural Alaska went down for lack of money. When HB 294 passed to House Finance, that committee slapped a contingency for passage that required $150 million be provided in the Capital Budget to fund the increase.

As it stands now, the assistance from Power Cost Equalization Program applies to the first 500 kwh per month a household uses and has nothing for small businesses. The required $150 million did not make it into the budget, according to Rep. Neal Foster's office. Foster was one of the backers of the bill introduced by Rep. Bryce Edgmon, Dist. 37.

The bill proposed raising the kilowatt-hours ceiling for assistance from 500 to 600 per month, and also added small commercial customers to the pool of entities eligible for PCE. Small commercial customers are defined as using no more than 2,400 kilowatt-hours per month. Businesses are currently ineligible to receive any PCE benefits," said Rep. Bryce Edgmon, Dist. 37, in his sponsor statement "We are experiencing one of the coldest Alaska winters in the last 25 years. While folks in the Bush have become used to conserving power to fall under the 500 kilowatt-hour ceiling, it is a struggle to do so in winter months. This year's weather is not helping that struggle."

The legislation proposed returning elements of the Power Cost Equalization (PCE) program to its 1998

Meera Kohler, CEO of Alaska Village Electric Coop. testified for passing the bill. AVEC keeps the lights on in 54 rural Alaska villages.

Rep. Bill Thomas, R-Haines and House Finance co-chair, asked if with the dwindling of oil and high prices, the PCE fund would not become "low hanging fruit."

"PCE comes with a pretty huge price tag," Edgmon said. "I'm not trying to put that aside. It is a policy call of the legislature. What do we want rural Alaska to look like going forward? And understand that the cornerstone of looking like any type of healthy sustainability is tied to en-

How much energy subsidy is enough," Thomas asked during Kohler's testimony. Until there was a solution for Western Alaska that reduced electrical power rates to a reasonable level-10 cents to 20 cents per kwh, there would never be enough, Kohler said. "Our communities are gasping for breath. The cost of energy is killing

"I am very optimistic we will design and put in palace an all-Alaska solution that's going to provide affordable energy across the state of Alaska," Kohler said.

Apparently, additional relief for rural Alaska will not come out of this legislature.

In other capital budget items, Nome did not do badly. Projects in Nome received funds of $79,119,000 out of the total capital budget pie of $2.9 billion. Money to buy two large wind turbines is in the packet for $4,069,000—to develop renewable energy. The budget, headed for Gov. Sean Parnell's desk and susceptible

Front St. site selected for museum

By Sandra L. Medearis

Plans for the Richard Foster Building took a jump ahead Thursday when the Nome Common Council agreed with the Nome Museum and Library Commission choice of a Front Street site as the priority address for the new construction.

Years of planning for construction currently funded by the state at $16 million will take on a new phase as the selection of a site will allow the planners, architects and engineers to get down to brass tacks for designing the building and its programs.

For old-timers, the potential site at the east corner of Steadman and Front streets is where enticing aromas once wafted out of the Billiken

Bakery. The site comprises lots owned by Thu Lan Munn, Leo Rasmussen, Jimmy West Jr. and the former site of the food bank under supervision of United Methodist Women's Global Ministries.

The commission identified about a dozen sites and forwarded the list to the Nome Planning Commission for a technical analysis on parking, traffic patterns, location, flood hazards, availability of adjacent properties and the like.

The measure of the potential space is about 29,000 square feet, according to John Handeland of the commission. How many and which

Off to See the Wizard

PAC is not that little clamshell guy who gobbled up kids back in the 1970s. PACs are Political Action Committees that have their own agendas, unlimited funds and well-concealed benefactors who are all set to lead us down the yellow brick road.

PACs give politics and politicians a big spin with enough torque to drill all the way to China. PACs perpetuate a lot of hokum unfettered by truth and responsibility. Their hyper partisanship leaves no space for real legislation. Their sole purpose is to control the public thought process and the devil takes the hindmost. Look at some of the TV ads we are subjected to. Some of these ads promote gold mining by telling us how much we need copper, how the pipeline didn't interfere with caribou migration (has nothing to do with gold mining). We have cute blond girls telling us how we should get real and not let South Dakota get oil money. We have a mystery ad telling us to thank Sen. Murkowski (she is not running for office). We have a not company busing the "Spirit of Manual". hyping the "Spirit of Alaska" to promote drilling in the Arctic. Many of these ads have a quick as a wink tail end segment in rapid speech and very small print type telling who paid for the ad.

Could we form a PAC to get rid of the stupid and often hurtful PAC ads? Could we campaign for openness in campaign funding? Could we demand that PACs be outlawed because they allow rich cowards to sling blatant untruths without showing their face and having no standard of truth or integrity? Of course the truth is so damned limiting. The PACs operate on the premise that the public is incredibly gullible. Perhaps they are correct—people will believe the craziest things. Real Alaskans need to take a lesson from the Wizard of Oz and look behind the PAC curtain. — N.L.M.

Front Properties LLC is based in Anchorage and according to their general manager Laura Nichols, they own five commercial buildings in Anchorage, four commercial buildings in Dutch Harbor, one in Salt Lake City, Utah, and now the Nome Federal Building. Nichols said that Front Properties LLC looks for "retired" buildings to buy with the intent to upgrade, renovate and turn them into energy efficient office

Front Properties LLC is owned by Steve Zelener who was in Nome last week to inspect the building and start to draw up plans for remodeling. Zelener said in a phone interview with The Nome Nugget that the goal is to reduce the building's energy consumption by upgrading the heating and ventilation system as well as the lighting. Zelener also mentioned that windows need to be replaced to help better insulate the building.

The building itself is structurally sound, he said. Aside from practical and energy cost-reducing improvements, Zelener plans to spruce up the building's atmosphere. "We are planning to paint the building to give it a more modern and elegant look," Zelener said. "Right now it looks very institutional." The structure was built in 1958 and Zelener said the improvements are intended to bring the building "into the 2012 era." The new owners plan to spend $500,000 on those improvements.

Charlie Johnson died April 12.

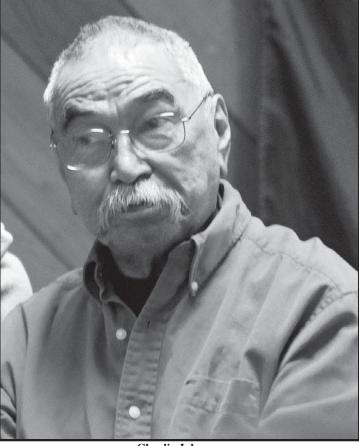

Charles "Tumungnaq" Johnson was born in White Mountain in 1939 and moved to Nome in 1944. Charlie graduated from Kodiak High School in 1958. On an athletic scholarship in Boxing, he attended Washington State University from 1961-64, studying mathematics. He lived in Europe for a year and returned to the states and received a Degree in Business Administration and Mathematics from the University of Oregon.

After working in marketing for several years he became the director of the Portland Urban Indian Center. He transformed it from a small storefront office into a multimillion dollar organization which provided many services to Portland's Native Americans.

In 1976 Charlie became the Executive Director of Kawerak. After three years Charlie helped Kawerak emerge from bankruptcy. In 1979 Charlie was elected to Bering Straits Native Corporation board of directors. In 1981 he became president of BSNC. During his five years as president, Charlie was instrumental in turning a company around that was deeply in debt. Charlie served as a director of BSNC through 2006, and at times serving as first and second vice presidents.

In 1978, Charlie was instrumental in forming the Eskimo Walrus Commission in order to establish and solidify Alaska Natives' subsistence rights in the Marine Mammal Protection Act. In 1994 he established the Alaska Nanuuq Commission, which he served as executive director until his death, and facilitated a Native to Native agreement between the US and Russia for the conservation of polar bears.

Charlie was appointed by the first President Bush as a Presidential Advisor to the US Arctic Research Commission. He sat on the Oversight Counsel for the International Arctic Research Center and was a member of the Scientific Review Group for the National Marine Fisheries Service. At the time of his passing, he was serving as chair of White Mountain Native Corp. and the co-chair representing the US on the Bi-Lateral Commission for the Conservation of Chukchi Polar Bears. He had served as vice chair for the Alaska National Bank board, a member of the Iditarod Trail Committee board, chair of the Alaska Federation of Natives, VP of the Inuit Circumpolar Conference-Alaska, and served on the US Delegation to the Arctic Council and to the Organization of American States.

Johnson was also a leader in establishing and administering visapassage for indigenous Chukotkans and Alaskans traveling between Russian and Alaska.

Charlie dedicated much of his life to ensuring that others, like him, would be able to continue practicing a subsistence lifestyle. He combined this passion with empowering disadvantaged groups through his vision and political influence that spanned nine presidents and across many international boundaries.

Charlie was preceded in death by his son Truman and leaves behind Brenda, his wife of 43 years; daughter Nicole; son Boogles and his wife Allison; grandchildren Drew, Adrianna, Teague, Alohna, Melody, Alyssa, and Davin.

'Charlie Johnson had many titles, but he'll certainly be remembered for one mission in particular: helping Alaskans assume their role in Arctic leadership," said Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell.

'No meeting with Charlie ever happened without a good laugh and a real sense of purpose," Treadwell said. "Charlie accomplished a great deal for Alaska. He will be sorely missed by many.'

lots will underlie the new building remains for planners to determine, Handeland said last week. The original idea was to build a museum of 14,000 square feet. Now a plans call for including new space for Kegoayah Kozga Library under the same roof. That would expand plans for the building to 17,000 to 20,000 square feet, Terry Hyer, architect, told the Council at its special meeting Apr. 12.

The feeling was that we just needed to get it narrowed down so the architect and engineer could develop a cost proposal with the funding available," Handeland said. "The last recommendation was to include the library inside as well. With the library, that shrinks the space for the museum, or we seek other funding. Everything we put into the property takes away from square footing.

The current library, in the same building as the Carrie M. McLain Museum, occupies 800-900 square feet, not enough for needed expansion of children's programs.

A question still on the table was whether the Richard Foster Building plans would include space sought by MUSEUM SITE-The Nome Museum and Library Commission considered about a dozen sites and has recommended all or part of this site for the Richard Foster Building that will house Carrie M McLain Museum and Kegoayah Kozga Library. The view looks at Front Street and Norton Sound from a space between Federal Way and Steadman Street. The Frank Okleasik family's home is not included as part of the potenKawerak, Inc.

The Council unanimously agreed 4-10 with the site choice. Council members Mary Knodel and Stan Andersen had excused absences from the special meeting.

Still, one issue still lurks unsettled. Kawerak Inc. representatives at the meeting spoke in favor of having the building include their project, Beringia Center of Culture and Science. Kawerak has lodged the request to share space and expenses in years past.

Loretta Bullard, president, said the culture center would need from 2,750 to 3,700 feet, leaving over 10,000 square feet for the museum and library. A rental agreement at $3 a square foot would yield an annual payment from Kawerak to City of Nome of $99,000 to $133,200, depending on the space allotted, Bullard said, and forge strong ties between the City and Nome's Alaska Native organizations.

Kawerak was concerned, Bullard said, that the process of design would go to far before a decision on the issue was reached. Kawerak has offered their lot on Seppala Drive for the building provided Kawerak could have input into the design.

The museum commission has not actively considered the offer, Bullard told the Council.

Both Bullard and Handeland figuratively removed one glove in the

"Kawerak has approached the City for 10 years on sharing space. We understand the museum commission is not interested, so we are coming to the Council as the decision makers.' Bullard said. The proposal would not move forward unless the Council gave direction to do so, she said. Kawerak could seek funding that the City did not have accessible.

"Some of the things Kawerak suggested in fact were not compatible. They were also or separate funding. They were working on buying Thu Lan's [Munn] building," Handeland said. "We worked hard over the years to secure funding for the museum and library, which is a department of The City's obligation was to seek funding for a comprehensive facility that doesn't include Native arts and programs, Handeland added.

"The City's obligation is to see that the City's needs are met. We are including all the people who are within the City of Nome in this," he Councilmen Jerald Brown and Randy Pomeranz favored looking at including Kawerak's plans.

"My strong desire would be a shared facility with Kawerak," Brown said. "There is a dire need for a facility for artifacts. There are a lot of artifacts in the Smithsonian because there is not a facility to accept them. It is a strong community need we need to address.

"If the City side is 3,000 square feet less, then so be it," he said. "Sorry, John."

Kawerak has expressed a need for climate-controlled equipment in order to bring home collections for good or on loan. She listed needs for rented space that included BCCS offices, Eskimo Heritage Program offices, art and artifact galleries, artifact and archival collections storage and a collection workroom. The City and the culture center could share other space: loading dock, restrooms, public event space, kitchen break room and classrooms, for ex-

Pomeranz said he could see accepting an entity to share the costs of a larger building. "Not passing it onto the taxpayer is attractive to me," Pomeranz said. "I would like to see more work on that.

Bullard and Kawerak had brought new facts to the discussion, Handeland conceded.

"There may be a way to make it work, he said.

The issue needed to be examined at the Council level, Mayor Denise Michels said.

The Council did not vote directly on inclusion of the cultural center, but voted unanimously asking the City's administration to examine the details of such a cooperative use of space — after space for the library has been accommodated.

The site proposed to the Council came out of a last week's meeting of City, museum and library employees, and Council representatives.

few months before closure, the TSF contains only about 11,5742 tons of paste tailings. Cobb said that the tailings were covered with a geo-membrane. Phase 2 of the reclamation plan says that the tailings would be hauled to the mine pit and buried

The closure plan says, "If the mine is not acquired by BSNC and SNC, NovaGold will initiate the Phase II closure activities during early summer 2012." There were no indications yet from BSNC where negotiations stand. "I am still bound by confidentiality in discussing ownership but I can say that the Phase I activities, focused on the tailings storage facility, are ongoing at the site per the approved closure plan," said Ron Rimelman, NovaGold's vice president of Environment, Health, Safety and Sustainability.

If Phase II is going to be initiated, according to the plan, the main plant site demolition is scheduled to begin in summer 2012 and includes all site facilities not needed for water treatment or the support of reclamation activities.

General Manager Nichols said it usually takes a calendar year from purchase to developing a game plan and then starting with renovations. Nome poses its own set of challenges as they need to factor in that materials need to be shipped to the site and the right kind of contractors need to be found. Nichols said that the building, although now privately owned, needs to be fixed up by contractors who satisfy federal rules. "Due to the tenants, it's still a federal facility and the federal government has stringent guidelines on who can access and work on the building,' Nichols said.

So far, she said, Front Properties LLC has taken over the leases from the GSA and is now in the process of making a game plan on how to proceed with renovations. Zelener also pointed out that as a private owner the building is now subject to City of Nome property tax, which it wasn't under federal ownership.

New owner of Federal Building

Asked what prompted Front Properties LLC to bid on the building and invest in the Nome community, Zelener said that he was attracted to the potential in Nome. "The gold fever, the potential for a Coast Guard station or oil development, any time when people come to a city to work or explore, they need offices and housing," Zelener said. "We bought it because it already has state and federal tenants. We didn't speculated on an empty building," Zelener said. Housing- the magic word!

Nome's chronic housing crunch is deemed to get worse with the upcoming summer construction season and the added gold rush. Asked whether Front Properties would also invest in housing buildings, Zelener said they want to first learn to understand Nome and then figure out how to proceed. "We explored some opportunities in the housing market,

First things first, and the new owners are now working on giving the Federal Building a facelift and a energy-consumption overhaul, starting this summer.

NPS School board honors students and personnel

By Lori Head

Standing room only with students, parents, employees, administrators, community members, board members, press and Richard Beneville, director of Community Schools, making sure there were enough pitchers filled with ice water and cut lemons - welcome to Nome Board of Education's April 10 regular

Why all the people? To begin, Mary Reader was honored for her 28 years with the district and presented with flowers, a small gift and a surprise visit from friend/co-worker for 22 years/cheese dip making/former NPS business manager Clara Langton who cashed in personal Alaska Airlines miles to be there and honor

Next honored was Chase Gray, manager of the Native Village of Council, for partnering with NPS to acquire a grant to provide eBook technology for the Nome Beltz Jr./Sr. High library.

Three Spirit of Youth nominations were recognized:

- Nome Beltz Drama Club under the direction of Ms. Nikki Scherer
- Jacob Martin (delegate to Shared Beringian Heritage Program Youth Forum)
- Teens Against Tobacco Use (TATU) group under the direction of Danielle Sylvester

The students of the month for February were honored:

- Robert (Bobby) Pate Jr. High • Cameron Smith - Sr. High
- The students of the month for March were honored:
- Hannah Alowa Jr. High • Tristan Matson – Sr. High

After all the compliments and accolades were done, board member Barb Nickels jokingly moved to adjourn, but not hearing a second, the board meeting continued.

Lemonade Day

Bryant Hammond, planning and development specialist of Kawerak, Inc., informed the board of Lemonade Day coming to Nome on May 6. The free, educational program is designed to teach youth how to start, own and operate their own business – a lemonade stand. Participants will receive a backpack and an opportunity to win a new bike donated by Nome Alaska Commercial Company. Registration deadline is April 24 – more information can be found at www.alaska.lemonadeday.org

Elementary news

Dave Keller, principal, reported on a successful class called "Love and Logic for the Classroom" taken by teachers that "has been helpful in identifying a wide range of effective strategies teachers can use to minimize classroom distractions and interruptions while at the same time, maximizing student's opportunities to learn and progress through the curriculum." NES will be hosting a workshop for parents based on the same philosophy called "Parenting with Love and Logic" that teaches the approach of raising children with loving support from parents while at the same time expecting kids to be respectful and responsible. The parent workshop is free, and will be held on Saturday, May 5 from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the NES library. Breakfast snacks and lunch will be served, door prizes will be offered and child care will be available upon request. Keller hopes parents will take advantage of this great opportunity. Keller does ask interested persons to contact Laurie Poston at 443-3285 or him at 443-5299 to register for the workshop and notify them of child care needs.

Currently at NES are three teacher resignations: Nikki Scherer - 1st grade, Diana Adams – 4th grade and Joni Earp – PE.

THUMBS UP TO COLLEGE— Sixth-graders from the Nome Elementary School had a field day at Northwest Campus last Friday. The "I'm Going to College" event allowed the kids to experience a day as a college student. Prior to the event, the students worked through an activity book in which they explored different types of colleges and careers. During the event, the children experienced five classes as college students for a day. This year's courses included biology, nursing, computer techonology, a library scavenger hunt, and early childhood education. At the end of the day students were given a certificate of completion for their "I'm Going to College" experience. Students also received a backpack filled with items to help gear them towards the idea that just a few short years they, too, can be college students.

School board discusses FY 2013 proposed budget

By Lori Head

The Nome Board of Education held a public hearing on April 9 regarding the proposed FY13 general budget. The sole community member to address the board was Patrick Callahan, activities director of Nome Public Schools. Responding to the board's decision to not increase student travel by 10 percent at a savings of $16,198 he wanted to be sure that the board, as well as the community, understood that an increase would not fund extra trips or frills, it would only aid in partially funding regular season travel by sports teams, music, BPA/Skills USA, student council and NYO. In fact, according to Callahan's best projections, the school district allocating $150,000 to student travel for FY13 would cover approximately 57 percent of actual travel next year. His projected amount of $260,000 included all teams' regular season travel, attending state competition and a 10 percent inflation rate.

One might ask where the other 43 percent of funds would be obtained. Beyond grants, it's a one word answer - fundraising. Athletes in Nome not only master their talents in singing, dribbling a ball or cheering, they learn how to be excellent raffle ticket salespeople, hot dog and popcorn vendors, free throw shooters, cake bakers — you name it, they've probably cleaned it, baked it, sewn it, auctioned it or sold it at a yard sale.

The information shared with the board put board president Betsy Brennan "on the fence," board member Amarok favoring adding back $15,000 to student travel, board member Jennifer Reader wanting to focus on direct instruction and possibly raising student activity fees, and board member Barb Nickels sticking with, "I don't want to raise that line item by 10 percent mostly because I know that students will

Broadband project TERRA Northwest to expand to Norton Sound villages this summer

By Diana Haecker

A project that promises to bring fast broadband internet service to Norton Sound and Nome is underway as crews for the so-called TERRA Northwest project of the GCI subsidiary Unicom Inc. are readying to work on a connection from Grayling to Unalakleet.

The TERRA Northwest project is going to connect to the TERRA Southwest broadband network that was installed last year covering 400 miles with new fiber optic cable and 13 new microwave towers to connect 65 communities in Bristol Bay and the Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta. The plan is to extend the network from Grayling to Unalakleet, Shaktoolik, to the Reindeer Repeater site 10 miles northwest of Shaktoolik, to the Golovin alternate repeater site 10 miles east of Golovin and on to Nome.

The first phase of TERRA Northwest, planned for the 2012 construction season, involves the installation of two new microwave towers at Unalakleet and Shaktoolik, and the three remote repeaters. Phase 2 would start next year, with the installation of three remote repeaters and one microwave tower connecting Shaktoolik to Nome. Originally, the project proposed to erect a repeater tower on Skookum Pass and then run fiber-optic cable overland along the Nome-Council Highway Safety Sound, but plans have changed and GCI will now erect a repeater tower at Gill Mountain and one at Cape Nome.

Eventually, the network would expand to include Stebbins, St. Michael, Elim, Golovin and White Mountain.

GCI rural broadband director Krag Johnsen described that the towers holding microwave dishes are approximately 60 to 100 feet tall. Repeater sites are located in remote area with no road access or power access. "Therefore we construct power generation facilities at the repeater sites," said Johnsen. Repeater sites are usually constructed by helicopter access only. The contractor, STG Inc. out of Anchorage has started to mobilize equipment and supplies to start work on the Grayling to Otter Creek

In both Unalakleet and Shaktoolik GCI will put up microwave towers and connect them to the village power grid. The only public lands used to perch the repeater sites on is the Otter Creek repeater site in the Nulato Hills and the Golovin alternate repeater site, ten miles east of Golovin.

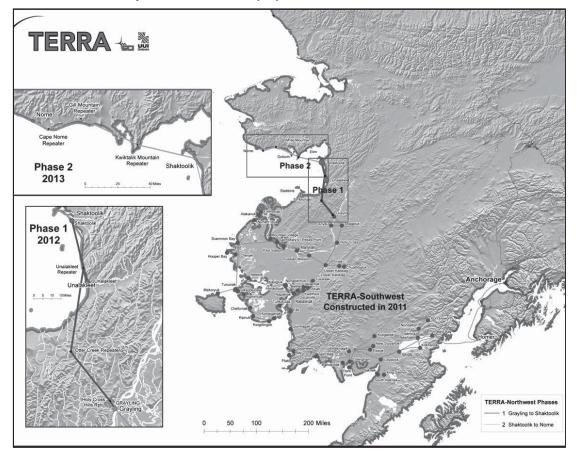

The 2012 and 2013 construction season for the project is funded, planned and in the stages of being permitted. The only agency involved in permitting is the federal Bureau of Land Management. The other repeater and microwave towers sit on private tribal or village corporation

The BLM Field office in Anchorage prepared a 358-page long Environmental Assessment, which was open for public comment until this week. Asked why no public notice was given that the document is out for public comment, BLM officials said that the project wasn't deemed controversial and thus no public notice.

The Regulatory Commission of Alaska awarded a $6 million for the $35 million TERRA Northwest proj-

On Monday, GCI announced new internet service plans for the broadband services starting at $24.99 per month. They say that the new download speeds are eight to 16 times faster than what was available up until switching over to broadband. When asked how pricing would be for the Norton Sound villages and Nome, Johnsen said that the pricing has not been finalized yet.

Alaska Ice AAU heads south for the summer

Seven Nome high school basketball players plan on a dizzying schedule of seven tournaments in six states this summer with hopes of valuable playing time and exposure to college coaches. Doug Boyer, formerly of Nome, began Alaska Ice AAU last summer and coached a girls' team including Nome's Devynn and Dylan Johnson. The team finished 13th out of 64 teams in the nation at the National AAU Tournament and also 21st out of 102 teams at the College Super Showcase Tournament in Orlando, FL.

What does one do with success like that? Boyer builds two teams for summer 2012 - a girls' team and a boys' team. Assisted by Bethel JV basketball coaches Jennifer Bradley and Matt Murphy, the three have chosen to spend their summer vacation coaching the teams - unpaid. The boys' team is composed of three Nome players and six Bethel play-players, as well as two from Dillingham, two from Barrow, one from Kotzebue and one from Togiak. For the summer of 2013 Boyer would like to expand the program to four teams and by 2014 he would like to add a junior high boys' and girls'

Boyer hopes that the intensity needed to be competitive can be canistered and brought back to the different local teams by exposing these Alaskan rural athletes to elite AAU teams from around the nation. He also values the exposure to college scouts and coaches. Last year, seven out of 10 athletes were offered opportunities to play community college to Division I basketball after their senior year.

Each participant does need to cover travel, housing and other related fees. Consequently, fundraising has begun with dodge ball tournaments, bagel sales, and rib

This spring so far rewards dog mushers with conditions that all dreamed of during the super cold days of this 2011/2012 winter, which the National Weather Service declared the second coldest winter on record in Nome. Last Sunday made dog mushers revel in the spring time magic as the blaring sun was shining on hard packed trails while temperatures were hovering around the 20°F, still cool enough to run a dog team.

An impromptu decision made by Nome Kennel Club members a few days earlier resulted in a short 8-mile race around the Gold Hill Loop. Ten dog teams showed up at the race start located at the snow dump entrance on Sunday morning at 10 a.m.

A film crew present in Nome to continue filming the second season for the reality show "Bering Sea Gold" added to the excitement as they collected "beauty shots" to spice up their show with some dog mushing action. Since the race was dubbed a fun run and the grand prizes awarded were cookies for all —baked by Janet Balice— anything went. Juniors competed with seasoned mushers. One team decided to race the loop in the opposite direction. And the winning team even featured a tandem set up consisting of musher Nils Hahn and his 8-year-old daughter Lizzy riding the double sled. The number of dogs was limited to eight.

The race was punctual and in twominute intervals, team after team raced up Gold Hill, took a "Haw" towards Icy View and Dredge #5, then a "Gee" through the Quonset huts near Osborn Road, down toward the Golf Ball on the Beam Road and following the trail back to Gold Hill. Volunteers Bianca and Deborah Trowbridge timed the incoming teams. Pat Owens made sure that the trail was still OK and Connor and Margaret Thomas proved invaluable by helping to secure sleds during the intense moments of waiting for the starting signal.

If conditions hold and the warming temperatures don't wreak havoc with the existing trail, there may be another "fun run" next Sunday around the same time at the same location.

This years race saw near perfect conditions for dog racing. Ken Anderson of Fox/Fairbanks won the race, crossing the finish line just 15 minutes ahead of Scott Smith from Nenana. Smith is the kennel partner of Aaron Burmeister of Nome/Nenana. Third place went to Norwegian Musher Sigrid Ekran, 1 1/2 hours behind the winner.

Gerry Riley of Nenana, the Iditarod 1976 champion - 75 years young - rounded out the field, finishing just over 20 hours behind the winner of the race.

competed against Caitlyn winner of the looser bracket. Caitlyn struggled to stay alive against Sierra and put the double elimination into a double match. The Wolverines were well represented in the wrestling. The final event of Friday was the wrist carry where the carriers were Jake Stenbach and Kyle Clark carrying Jens Irelan the farthest.

One event of Friday needs its own paragraph because it stirred up the competitive instinct of the audience, craft merchants and even pregnant ladies. Phillip managed the score sheet choosing to sit out this event. Abby, Eli and Zach Tozier manned the greasing station. Rules were explained as this: simple grab the greased stick either pull the stick out of your opponents hand or get the other person off their feet. Pamyua's Ossie entered this one representing the singers. Out of the stands jumped Marilyn Irelan to give him a tussle. Then Asaaluk Irelan walked over from her craft booth. Eight-months pregnant she out-pulled her brother Jens.

Saturday included performances by Elijah Cabinboy in the Alaskan High kick as well as outstanding performances by the Wolverines. The Native games are fun because top performers and record holders are right there to help along the younger athlete. The significant thing about this is the top performers such as Phillip and Elijah help the younger such as Jens to soon be competing head to head with them. Both evenings Pamyua demonstrated different games with the help of Jens and Elijah with musical background in the middle of their song "The Games." The grace and beauty of the Native games was a whole lot of fun. Check out the Nome NYO Facebook page for the detailed results of each

Are diet sodas better for your health?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Does diet soda or diet "pop" make you healthy? Probably not, according to research published from two recent studies.

Daily consumption of diet soda may increase a person's risk of having a heart attack or stroke, according to research out of the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine published in January of this year.

Over a ten-year period, daily consumers of diet soda had a 43 percent higher risk of developing cardiovascular disease compared to people who either drank no soda, people who drank regular soda, or those who drank less than a can of diet soda daily.

Furthermore, the researchers found that the risk was the same regardless of whether or not a person had previous risk factors for heart disease. The risk was increased both for a person with high blood pressure, bad cholesterol, and diabetes as well as a person who was otherwise healthy.

In other words, diet soda does not appear to be a good choice for the prevention or treatment of cardiovascular disease according to this

This study was not large, only a few thousand people participated, and the researchers relied heavily on people's ability to recall their soda consumption. Therefore the results are important, but more research is needed before anyone can say with any authority that diet soda causes heart attacks or strokes.

A second study, published this month in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition helps answer the question about whether or not diet soda consumption leads to weight loss, or at least prevents weight gain.

Again, the news is not so good for soda lovers. The study examined the interplay between dietary choices and diet beverage consumption, including diet soda consumption. The researchers found that over a 20-year period people who eat healthy and do not drink diet beverages maintain a healthier waistline compared to everyone else in the study including people who eat a healthy diet and do drink diet beverages.

In other words, if your goal is healthy weight management, diet soda is not helpful according to the

The results of these studies are not surprising. Diet soda and similar low calorie beverages may be marketed as healthy, but a growing body of research suggests diet sodas are actually unhealthy.

Diet beverages and artificial sweeteners may trick the taste buds, but MRI studies suggest the brain is not fooled. Pleasure centers of the brain remain unsatisfied until real glucose enters the system. Therefore, people who drink diet beverages tend to consume calories, often more calories than needed, in other

Russell Jim Tekaghaghmii Gologergen "Tekaay" December 30, 1955 - March 2, 2012

Russell Jim Gologergen was born on December 30, 1955 to Timothy and Anna Gologergen in Savoonga. He died unexpectedly on March 2, 2012.

Russell's life was dedicated to his faith in God, his family and friends. He was raised by Amos Pinaaya and considered this his family. He attended Savoonga School, until his family moved to Nome in 1970. There he attended the Nome Public Schools and graduated from Nome-Beltz High School. In 1986, he moved back home to Savoonga.

Russell was currently in his second term as an Elder for the Savoonga Presbyterian Church. One of his main accomplishments in his life was giving of himself to the Lord. He was an original member of Arnold's whaling crew that landed a whale in which he was so proud! The first whaling crew consisted of himself, Arnold and Bivers Gologergen, Myron Kingeekuk and Joe İya, Sr. At times he would go boating with his cousins Bivers and Aaron. The last whaling crew he was with was Arnold, Edward and Arthur Gologergen and Myron Kingeekuk. He happily stated that he and Arnold will be getting ready this spring for another whaling season when he returned back to Savoonga.

Some of his accomplishments included serving faithfully in the National Guard Army, the construction of various schools and pre-fabricated houses in Seattle for BSRHA, Savoonga Water and Sewer Project and IRA Roads Project. He would often tell his family how he was hired on and would move up quickly in his line of work. Russell's expertise was in carpentry and mechanics and he excelled in anything that was handed to him to work on. He was often called upon to give advice or check on things that broke down and needed fixing. He was an accomplished carver and also did some tanning of seal skins with the seals he caught only to brag that he had the nicest ones that he tanned himself!

Russell was a man who was dedicated to his family, whether they were close or extended members. He considered all family equally. He had a special place in his heart for everyone. When you saw "Tekaay," you would automatically feel his love, and his happiness for you and his big smile. He was a man who was very proud of his family, especially his nieces and nephews. He never hesitated to brag about their accomplishments by sharing it with all that were around him, even if they were not listening. He always walked away with a smile from ear to ear, only to move onto the next person he ran into and retell the same story and be just as proud and happy. In fact, when family texted him about something great that happened in Nome, he would reply with "Now I'm gonna brag even more! HE,

He always called/texted his sisters, nieces and nephews about what he was doing or had done, only to end with one question, "Everyone OK tho?". Upon hearing they were, he was satisfied. When his family was sad about the passing of loved ones, he would respond by telling them to think of other relatives whose loved ones have passed on, and to know their sadness they are experiencing and to say some prayers for them. A family member once asked how he was doing during a big storm. His response was, "Don't worry about me, worry about others that may be affected, I am going to stay up and keep watch and help as much as I can and say some prayers for all of them, I'll be Russell's devotion to his dog Shuric was amazing. He was his true companion; he loved him like his own son! Always looking for his next meal and never hesitating to ask around for scraps for him. One of the last things he was concerned about was to get dog food and make sure it was sent to Lee, so Shuric would be fed.

Russell and his brother Lee were close in their own way and he often ate Ada's cooking at Lee's. He spent time with his precious Awliinga, teaching how to fish, hunt and taking him on his many outings.

Russell was always quick to help others making sure they were OK. He was very dedicated to check on his aunts; Harriet (Palaay), Janet (Napaziighhaq), Ina (Akilghumii) and Gertrude. He will be greatly missed by them. He took it upon himself to make a handicap ramp for Janet at her house, after her stroke, to make it easier for her to come in and out of her home.

Since his family lived in Nome and Anchorage, he worked extra hard to provide neqepik for them. He was always giving with his share that he harvested with relatives in Savoonga. He gathered, picked and hunted to provide for his loved ones, always sending boxes of food for his sisters, brothers and nieces. He always teased in a good way by saying, "enjoy your neqepik" with a big smile and happiness in his heart.

Russell was the most familiar sight during the long winter months where he would be fishing. Whether it was very cold, winding or snowing bad, his familiar profile would be seen down on the ice pack. He was always found where the blue cods and kayuupiks were. Because of his perseverance, people would go to his fishing areas and harvest fish for their families. He would also take his nephew Awliinga when he would go out fishing. At times, he would take his dog and would go beach combing and fishing during the summer and fall season. He even composed a fishing song, after spending many, many hours, days, months fishing over the years.

He was always so happy that he even went as far as to introduce himself as "Happy" to people he met along the way. He was not shy to express his happiness to Eskimo dance and proudly accompanied both sides of his relatives who danced clan songs. Recently, he was so proud to perform his father's song by dancing and drumming at the same time, something that surprised everyone.

He was preceded in death by his loving parents, Timothy and Anna Gologergen, his beloved sister Juliana, his nephews Edward and David, his great niece Andrea, his uncles Edward, Arthur and Abner Gologergen, Jonathan Annogiyuk, his aunts, Ora Gologergen, Ellie Kulukhon and Della Waghiyi and many beloved cousins the so loved very much.

He lovingly leaves behind, his brothers; Timothy Jr, Lee (Ada), Dustin (Barbara), his sisters; Linda (Chris), June, Joyce and Rosali. His nieces and nephews; Kristy, Rena (Jade Greene), Ryan, Derek (Jade Hill), Jillian, Leeann and Timothy, Sheila (Josh), Nolan (Stephanie), Kerry, Niaomi, Raenelle (Tre), Taeler, Colin, Kyle, Amos, Scotty, Tianna, Alyssa, Rhiannon and William "Awliinga". Saying it Sincerely

Karen Sonray, Pastor Our Savior Lutheran Church
Nome Ministerial Association member

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of all knowledge. Proverbs 1: 7

I thought of this piece of truth from Proverbs when I heard recently that the leader of the Roman Catholic Church preached his Easter sermon on how in our day of age we are more in awe of technology than we are in awe of God.

I find this to often be true and it can end up causing us difficulty in our spiritual lives as a community and as individuals. We have advanced so much in our modern age: we can call one another instantly, text each other across many miles and time zones, post via the internet a message or a video that can go out to the entire world in a matter of seconds. We are eager to be the first to get a new type of phone or gadget.

This is a real gift but let's face it , like all gifts, it can easily become a vice and keep us from being in relationship with one another and with God. Too easily we forget the One who is the true Giver and has the power over our life and death.

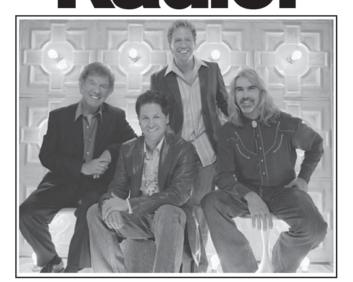

The Hebrew word for "fear" might be better translated as "awe." To have a sense of wonder as we behold the majesty of our God is a healthy spiritual attitude and state of being. We often are insulated from that sense of "awe." As human beings we start to think we are in control of everything in this world and life.

In biblical stories the initial response at seeing an angel — a messenger of God — is almost always "fear" or "awe." Angels deliver helpful messages and give important pronouncements to call us human beings into attention: look God is at work and moving in our communities. God wants to use your gifts and talents for his greater purposes.

What is God saying to us in our families at this time and place? What is God pronouncing to us? Are we listening? Are we insulating ourselves from the power of God and God's voice in our lives? Knowledge that is satisfying and eternal comes from God alone who can satisfy this deep longing and thirst n our lives.

Public Notice State of Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, Division of Water Notice of Water Quality Antidegradation Infor-mational Teleconference April 13, 2012

The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) Division of Water will hold informational teleconferences on water quality protection. The Department has an existing policy on water quality protection established in regulations at 18 AAC 70.015, commonly referred to as the "antidegradation policy." DEC is not proposing changes to the policy but is currently developing implementation procedures for the policy with input from an existing stakeholder workgroup and the public.

The antidegradation policy and implementing procedures are complex. As one element of Alaska's Water Quality Standards, they play a role Alaska's water dualiny Standards, lirely play a role in wastewater discharge permitting decisions. At the teleconferences, DEC Division of Water Director Michelle Bonnet will provide a presentation that describes the origin of antidegradation requirements; ways to learn more; and how local governments, tribes, and the public can provide early, meaningful comments to DEC before DEC develops the implementation procedures. The implementation procedures will be in the form of draft regulations that will undergo a formal public comment period late this year.

The theoreforeness are designed to be odd.

The teleconferences are designed to be educational and informational and are not part of a formal public comment process. Both teleconferences will cover identical material. The teleconferences will be held on April 24 from 10–11:30 a.m. and April 26 from 6-7:30 p.m. The teleconferences will be held at ten Alaska Legislative Information Offices: Anchorage, Bar-row, Bethel, Dillingham, Fairbanks, Juneau, row, Bethel, Dillingham, Fairbanks, Juneau, Ketchikan, Kotzebue, Nome, and Sitka. In order to provide quality audio connections and a visual presentation, there will not be a separate call in

WELCOME - The new Bering Sea Restaurant opened its doors for business last month. Owner Sang Yi, standing left, offers a mix of American and Asian food specialities. Waitress Shannon Eggert delivers two hamburgers to patrons as manager Al Burgo, right, looks on.

Bering Sea Restaurant adds flair to Nome's dining scene

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

It is Fat Freddies no more. The new restaurant that set up shop in the old Fat Freddy location adjacent to the Nugget Inn now has a completely different feel and different look to it. The Bering Sea Restaurant opened in March just before Iditarod teams were arriving a stone's throw away under the burled arch. The eatery has undergone a complete make-over and change in menu as well.

The new owner Sang Yi - who formerly owned Twin Dragon - has sunk a lot of money into the transformation of the place. The front has completely changed with a large sign stating "Bering Sea Restaurant" above the entrance.

The door is framed by river rocks held in place with mesh wire. The interior design is a stunning mix of retro chic and Zen-inspired simplicity with walls that feature plywood cut to give it a feel of bamboo trim, mirror mosaic and elaborate wall decorations that feature lots of mirrors and three-dimensional effects.

Window seating features a priceless ocean view in diner-type benches and in the back, regular tables are arranged for more formal seating.

A back room that would lend itself for private parties or functions, features wall decoration consisting of empty soda cans held at bay by mesh wire and seating is the latest retro chic style of round saucer chairs that seem to come right out of a 1970s James Bond movie.

Sang Yi said he had worked for 10 months on renovating the place and enlisted the help of an interior designer to make the restaurant into an eye candy with sophisticated ambience. "I try to make it the best restaurant in town," Yi said. Aside from the modern interior, the menu offers a mix of American and Asian cuisine.

American food is well represented with thick and juicy hamburgers and all its variations. The Korean and Japanese specialties are showcased by the long list of sushi on the menu. Yi hired a sushi chef, Joe An, who learned the art of sushi making in Japan.

An, standing behind the sushi bar that features fresh fish of the day, skillfully cut cucumbers in paper thin slices and said that he used to be an electrician. He worked as a subcontractor for the US Navy in Yokosuka, Japan where he befriended a Japanese sushi chef.

The chef taught him the basics of sushi making and let him work at his restaurant. From there, An went to New York City and worked for a year in a sushi restaurant.

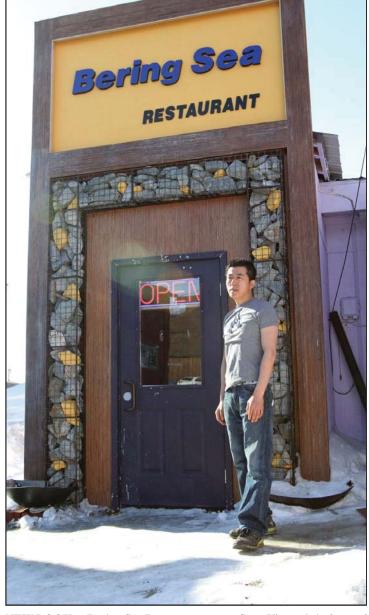

Wanderlust plagued the young An and he moved on to California. "I became bored there, too," he said and that's when he booked a ticket to Nome and arrived in the Gold Rush City a month ago. It's quiet here, he said with a shy smile.

Yi said he has been in Nome since 1990. He used to run the Twin Dragon restaurant until he sold it last

February. The Bering Sea Restaurant is open from 6 a.m. until 11 p.m. Yi said he has five employees working in the kitchen, including a breakfast cook who used to work at Airport Pizza, the Polar Café and restaurants in Seattle. The sushi chef is working the sushi bar and for now, two waitresses are in charge of serving the Al Burgo is the restaurant's manager and said he'd like to keep things fresh - look for changes on the menu, daily specials for lunch and dinner and theme nights, such as Mexican specials. Burgo also said that the restaurant would be working with the Norton Sound Seafood Plant to offer fresh seafood salmon, halibut and maybe even king crab when available. "We want to make it a community restaurant, a fun place to go to," Burgo said.

While the restaurant was very busy at its initial opening with Iditarod visitors things have slowed down. And that's OK for now, Burgo said. "It was nice and steady and it gives us time to get ready and to gear up for summer.'

NEW LOOK - Bering Sea Restaurant owner Sang Yi stands in front of the newly renovated restaurant.

WORKS OF ART - Sushi chef Joe An, left, just prepared a Holiday Roll with seared salmon on the left, and a Dragon Roll topped with eel on the right, as restaurant owner Sang Yi looks on. Yi said the restaurant orders fresh fish daily from an Anchorage fish market. In the future, the restaurant is planning to put local seafood on the menu.

BON APPETIT — Sushi chef Joe An bows as he offers a Shrimp Crunch Roll to a guest.

Sparks fly at city council meeting

Councilman Andersen challenges Mayor to explain juggling in Juneau

By Diana Haecker

It was a mess, Juneau was, said Mayor Denise Michels. The mayor was visiting the state's capitol to see that Nome's interests are taken into account as legislators dole out state monies for capital projects, but a long and complicated fight over port funds landed her in hot water at home during Monday's regular common council meeting.

Councilman Stan Andersen, while discussing an item in the city manager's report about enlisting the help of Paul Fuhs for the purpose of completing technical portions of the Nome Port and Harbor development plan, turned to Mayor Michels and asked, by the way, who authorized Michels to ask for $50 million for port extension projects?

Michels countered saying that she acted in line with the council's legislative priority list that listed port extension projects as their number two priority. "It was a once in a lifetime opportunity to get our projects in," Michels said. She talked about Senate Bill 163, a general obligation bond bill that changed so fast and furiously during her visit to Juneau that she had to act accordingly.

Here is the rough sketch of what went down in Juneau: The bill and bond proposal originally included only port projects including $200 million for the Port of Anchorage and $10 million for five other Alaskan ports, including Nome. While in the Community and Rural Affairs committee, Senator Donnie Olson introduced an amendment that asked for $50 million for port extensions in Kotzebue. Mayor Michels acted fast, and asked Olson to include $50 million for Nome's port extension. In order to get ready for the new Arctic future, Nome's port needs to extend the causeway from the current -22 ft. depth to -35 ft. Michels and city engineers produced a justification that showed that these $50 million are actually needed and not just a number pulled out of thin air. "I can't go to the legislature and ask for $50 million without a concept plan in hand that shows what we get for $50 million," Michels said.

The House, on the other hand, completely changed the bill, and the House Finance Committee turned it into a transportation bill that included road projects. Michels watched in horror as the leadership began to strip the bill and whittled it

Summer expected to worsen Nome's housing crunch

By Diana Haecker

Good luck finding a reasonably priced apartment or rental unit this summer in Nome. The perennial housing crunch is about to get worse as temporary construction workers and other seasonal workers are joined by an unknown number of gold rush prospectors who are headed for Nome with the intent to strike it rich.

Nome is going through growing pains but the actual growing part doesn't seem to happen. While the new hospital, slated to open its doors this fall, is promising to be a place of healing and expanded health care service, those who will staff it in addition to existing employees will have a hard time finding a place to live. Plus, the current housing shortage is not even taking into account the potential long-term expansion for port operations, potential U.S. Coast Guard presence, and offshore resource development with its support fleet and increased arctic shipping that may add to the housing pressure in the long run.

Where there is commerce, there are people who need to be housed. Yet, no new apartment buildings are going up, no existing houses are being fixed up and even the proposed industrial camp ground at Dredge 6 for transient summer miners may not become reality. Nome Gold Alaska business development manager Mitch Erickson, who proposed the camp on Nome Gold land, said the City asked for a conditional use permit that needs to be renewed each year. "Right now, there is no description of camp grounds in the city zoning code," Erickson said.

Fishermen ask for separation of fishing and dredging fleet

By Diana Haecker

Four fishermen came before the Nome Port Commission during their regular meeting last Thursday, bringing up several issues connected to the anticipated increase in small gold dredges operating in the waters off Nome this summer. Bill Mathisen was concerned that the dredges are tying up at Belmont Point and are not paying anything, whereas he as a fisherman is under the new tariff "$10,000 in the hole before we even get in the water."

Mathisen also pointed out safety hazards like small dredges not being sufficiently lighted and are hard to see as fishing boats return to the harbor late at night, and having no diver-down flags in the water while divers are working underwater.

The Coast Guard is going to address safety issues, harbormaster Joy Baker said. The Coast Guard has announced their intention to visit

Nome for a week in late May and early June to educate ocean-going miners on what is required of them. All offshore miners are as of this month required to display the last four numbers of their Dept. of Natural Resources permits on their ves-

Letters

Dear Editor,

It is exciting that we will soon see the culmination of 20 years of effort to get a new home for the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum, which will more prominently present and safeguard the ever-expanding collections of our entire community's history and culture. As you reported last week, a preferred site was selected, and we are hopeful negotiations to acquire the area will be completed soon so final design may commence and construction can begin next summer.

The Museum and Library Commission recommended several sites, feeling the community would best be served by locating the facility on or near Front Street. The Planning Commission devoted many hours reviewing these recommended and alternative sites to insure the location would be compatible with land use and development regulations.

Concurrently, efforts were underway to secure legislative funding and to develop the exhibit program. We are indebted to our State Legislators for providing funding to construct the Richard Foster Building, and to Richard's family who has agreed to transfer many of the treasures from his own personal museum. This will further augment our collection, which includes additional artifacts, diaries and photographs Museum Director Laura Samuelson has been successful in getting returned (as well as having collected oral history from donors) over the past 15 years. Most recently, Don and Diane (Swanberg) Peterson sent back home numerous Eskimo carvings and baskets their family collected, and more items are being returned by others on a regular basis.

Additionally, there was thoughtful consideration on how to best utilize operating resources which led to the recommendation to incorporate our community library in the new facility. With the assistance of a consultant, a comprehensive review of existing displays, stored artifacts and items folks have offered to donate (as soon as we have the room) were studied to develop a preliminary thematic prioritization and emphasis chart. The new museum has been planned to dedicate space in the following manner: Bering Sea Eskimo (25%), Gold Rush (20%), Early Nome Streetscape (20%), Dog Mushing (10%), Military-Aviation (9%), Cold War/Russia's Open Back Door (5%), Maritime (5%), Nome today (4%) and the Carrie M. McLain Collection (2%). Modification will be required to incorporate Richard's collection and to house the original Cape Nome District Recorders Books recently acquired.

OPINION

The new City Museum will be a larger facility, not only from the display gallery, but also to safely house collection items that are currently spread out in various storage facilities around town. Modest office space and small meeting rooms will double as research areas. Now that the Library will also be included in the new facility about 25% of the space initially envisioned for museum use is being planned to be repurposed for the library. Balancing the needs of both programs has required sacrifice, and effort has been dedicated to determine areas that can be utilized by both programs. In my opinion, an attempt should be made to keep the programs close to those envisioned, and as represented to the Alaska Legislature during the funding quest of several years.

I would encourage citizens and welcome visitors to stop by today's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum and Kegoayah Kozga Public Library. While modest in size, the staff has done an excellent job cramming as much as possible within their existing four walls. When the new facility is complete, I am sure the community will be proud of the depictions of our rich history and expanded offerings. With thousands of Eskimo, gold rush, and military artifacts in the museum collection, and many historical, rare and out of print books in our library, it will be wonderful to have more of our great history out of boxes and on display. I hope we will develop our new museum and library to their fullest potential for the entire community while we have the opportunity.

There's no place like Nome! Sincerely, John K. Handeland Nome, AK

Let's Flaunt It

As editor and publisher of The Nome Nugget I'm taking this opportunity to recognize the efforts of The Nugget reporters, production staff, contributing writers, and members of the community of Nome and western Alaska. You make the Nome Nugget what we are. The Nome Nugget was named the "Best Weekly Newspaper in Alaska" by the Alaska Press Club. We are the best because our readers are the best.

We also received another very special honor, "The Howard Rock First Amendment Award." Howard Rock was a Native from our region who was a newspaper crusader for free speech and keeping the public informed. It is indeed an honor to receive the award for carrying on his ideals, and we will fight for openness in government and the public's right to be informed. Nugget reporters Diana Haecker and Sandra Medearis also won first place awards— Medearis for Best Sustained Coverage for "Winter fuel delivery for Nome" and Haecker for Best Environmental Reporting "Coastal Management dies in House" and Best General News Story "Nome recovers after super storm."

The Nugget reminds its readers that it is important to demand open government, public disclosure and to take part in our democratic form of government. We also stress that The Nugget will fight for the interests of the people of Nome and western Alaska. We are proud to stand up for freedom of speech and the First Amendment. —N.L.M.—

Barrow man shot by police officer

The North Slope Borough police department reported last week that a 31-year-old Barrow man was shot and wounded by a police officer after he had threatened to kill himself with

According to a police press release, a 30-year-old woman called police for help in a domestic violence situation on Wednesday, April 18. When officers arrived, the suspect had left the scene but returned armed with a gun. He pointed it at himself and threatened to shoot him-

*Essentials of Discipline

When officers told the suspect to put the gun down, he pointed it at them and that's when one officer fired a shot. The suspect was hit and sustained a non-lethal wound to his arm and shoulder.

He was transported to the Samuel Simmonds Hospital in Barrow and then medevaced to Anchorage for treatment at the Alaska Native Medical Center.

Barrow police decline to comment or reveal the names of the officer and suspect involved as the incident is still under investigation.

Dexter Pass road busted open

The Dept. of Transportation has completed snow removal and officially opened the Dexter Pass Road for traffic. Evan Booth, DOT's western district superintendent said that a little bit of touch-up work is yet to be done on the road, but it's open and

The area is currently zoned as industrial. It's a matter of filling out a new form and bringing the same idea back to the planning commission in their next meeting in May before the campground is permitted. According to Erickson, he had 30 people ask for pricing so far. Ten of the interested folks are here already, he said, and are looking for a place to put their containers.

"Another one-third of them is interested in coming to see if mining in Nome is something they want to do," Erickson said. The remaining ten people plan to be high-bankers and work the beaches.

Local realtor Melissa Ford with

Nome Sweet Homes wholeheartedly supports the camp idea and said it would take a lot of pressure off the housing situation. "The sky is not falling, but there is not enough housing for the existing population," Ford said. She said if the campground would be in existence today, a company which just bought a duplex site unseen- and is going to displace two local families, would have set up shop there. Ford added that people are renting out bedrooms, at a price of $800 a month. "I get at least three to four calls a day of people asking for rentals," Ford said. Families are doubling up in homes and the families who suffer most are median income families.

Ford gives an example. A two-bedroom rental that went for $1,200 per month just a few years ago now fetches $1,600 per month as a long-term rental. Wait, things get crazier, as companies offer $3,000 for that apartment for a short-term rental over the summer. No wonder landlords are tempted to install summer workers in their apartments and then shut them down for the winter, when part of the landlord's obligation is to pay for heating fuel.

In the house market, Ford said, she has 15 people pre-qualified to buy, but they can't find a suitable house. Financeable homes are gone within two to three days on the market. Ford said that the typical sales time for a $300,000 home was about nine months to two years. "Now a comparable house is gone in three weeks," Ford said. Homes under $150,000 are gone in 48 hours and buyers, when chosen, are so happy that they don't quarrel much and pay the complete closing fees.

So, what's the hold up for developers to get busy and build apartment buildings? For one, local experts peg the cost of construction between $250-$325 per square foot. Ford said that new construction financing is difficult to get and that available land is also in short supply.

Tony Parsons with the Bering Straits Development Corporation, a subsidiary of the Bering Straits Native Corporation puts the cost of building higher, at $325 to $500/sf. He said that the BSNC board is talking about the housing crisis in their meetings, but he has not received direction from the board to go ahead and buy materials to construct apartment buildings.

Mitch Erickson offered the explanation that appraisals – necessary to determine loan amounts for prospective builders - are well below construction costs. And this keeps builders from building to sell. Another expert said developers would be looking at a 15-year payback time, when they usually want to turn a profit after seven years.

The draft Nome Comprehensive Plan 2020 quotes a US Census Bureau list of vacant housing units at 263, however, that doesn't mean that they are habitable. According to the Census Bureau's table, there are an estimated 1,500 housing units, 1,216 are occupied, 557 of them occupied by owners, 659 occupied by renters and 263 yacant.

Ford offers an explanation of why a lot of the run-down buildings can't just be torn down and replaced with new housing. "It's the cloudy titles," Ford said. A lot of properties in town, she explained, have a lot of names to their title and it is not easy to sort out the land ownership, much less get everybody to agree on one course of action of what to do with the property. Another problem, she said, has to do with the city's setback requirements. "The setback requirements have stalled a lot of new development," Ford said.

Falling through the cracks

"Even if not a single miner came to Nome this summer, we'd still have a housing crisis," said Sue Steinacher, co-chair of the Nome Emergency Shelter Team a.k.a. NEST. NEST is not a homeless shelter, but gauging by the changing clientele that NEST officials see, things are getting worse for local families. Steinacher reports that this winter, they saw 130 people come through the shelter, with 10 or 12 regulars returning frequently. But they also helped two families. One family recently moved back from Anchorage and couldn't find a place to stay. In the other case, a man and his kids fled a domestic violence situation at home and since the Bering Sea Women's Group does not take up men, they didn't know where else to turn but NEST. The organization put them up at apartments at the Polaris down to $10 million in port monies for Nome and Kotzebue each. "Things happened fast and furious," Michels told Andersen. "I apologize to the public, but I thought the port commission had approved that."

Andersen countered by saying that the port commission is not a separate body that can make that kind of decision and that Nome is run by a council-city manager form of government. "What bothers me is that the whole $50 million thing got out of hand. Spending that kind of money was not authorized," Andersen said

Michels defended her actions. "This was vetted through the council," Michels said. "My job is to deliver you guys' priorities," Michels said.

"But I didn't like the way it was handled," Andersen said.

Michels repeatedly apologized to the public and explained that she pursued a two-prong approach by asking Senator Olson to put money in the capital bill for inner harbor improvements and to ask for money in the general obligation bond for port extension projects. Michels said she kept the council in the loop and updated them with emails. The Council adopted a resolution on January 4 that Port of Nome improvements as the number 2 priority for $161,500 million. The improvement list included Snake River moorage expansion, deep water port design and construction, barge ramp loading dock construction and causeway ramp dock construction as well as south and east dock fender repairs.

In the bigger picture, the Legislature did cut a lot of Nome projects, including slashing the State building budget from $10 million to $5 million, and Michels said despite promises from the Senate's co-chair, money for the new hospital didn't materialize either. "We sure need an explanation from Juneau," Michels said.

In other business, present council members Randy Pomeranz, Josie Stiles, Stan Andersen and Jerald Brown passed the second reading of an ordinance to sell property to the State of Alaska's DOT for the Snake River Bridge replacement for a price of $318,000

The Council swiftly passed several resolutions that were listed under new business. In connection with the Snake River Bridge replacement, a DOT project, the council agreed to a resolution that would put the City in charge of maintenance and ownership of Jafet Drive, the road that will connect the new Snake River Bridge with Port Road. The Council voted unanimously to hire Thomas Moran as the new city clerk under a twoyear contract that pays Moran $65,000 for the first year, with an 3.8 percent raise in the second year, and if the contract would be extended, a 3 percent raise in the third year. Moran replaces Vanessa Musich, who according to the written city manager's report will continue to work at City Hall as the Engineering Technician. Jim Dory, the current engineering technician will retire from city services by the end of April.

The Council also approved a contract with Ethan Berkowitz as an energy consultant. "So, he's gonna be your energy guru, huh?" asked Councilman Andersen after having investigated which pot of funds would pay for the $36,000 that Berkowitz would be making in the year he's under contract. City Manager Josie Bahnke said that the Common Council had recognized the need for an independent contractor to deal with energy questions and that Nome Joint Utilities Manager John Handeland had offered to chip in $20,000 out of NJUS funds. The resolution to hire Berkowitz and his firm Strategies 360 Inc. passed unanimously.

Miner Jim Hansen was the only person to testify during the public hearing that concerned a mining permit renewal for Nome AK Gold Concentrates LLC for the upcoming mining season. Hansen attested to the integrity and professionalism of the said mining outfit and the council without much discussion passed the resolution to grant the permit.

NJUS Manager John Handeland updated the council on legislative issues: Nome got $3 million for the ongoing water and sewer project and $4 million for a wind project. That was it from Juneau. Handeland furthermore reported that NJUS crews have completed the first overhaul of one Wärtsilä generator and that the machine is up and running again. In other NJUS news, Handeland is working on the fuel contracts and said he put fuel receipts in two shipments, one to take place in June and the other for an early September delivery. With lessons learned in the not-so-distant past, the NJUS board asked NJUS administrators to move the fuel delivery date closer to summer than fall, just in case weather or other acts of higher powers would prevent a fall delivery.

Mayor Denise Michels appointed and the council approved the following port commissioners. Mike Sloan and Randy Romenesko were selected to occupy two new port commission seats for three-year terms. Iura Leahu was appointed to fill the remainder of Jeff Darling's tenure until June 2013 as port commissioner. The five-member port commission expanded at the port commission's recommendation and the common council's blessing to seven members.

Draft mining permit drops to $500; opens mining records

By Sandra L. Medearis

In a special meeting April 17, the Nome Planning Commission gave a draft mandatory mining permit law a thorough hashing over to limit and control recreational mining activity offshore and to generate fees for City services and enforcement.

A list from the state Dept. of Natural Resources effective April 17 showed 86 state permit applications approved with 14 more applications coming in that day, already too many for efficient port use, according to Joy Baker, harbor master.

The Nome Common Council asked for the meeting and asked Brooks Chandler, city attorney, to draw up the draft mining ordinance. The City owns the 5,750 acres of tidelands but not subsurface rights, owned by the state, based on a patent it received from State of Alaska in January 1986.

The ultimate impact of the gold rush on Nome beaches is unknown, all agreed. City Manager Josie Bahnke has concern based "on what we saw last year significantly impacted City services, Search and Rescue and Nome Police Department, and a whole lot of time and effort," she said. The City needs the mechanics to know who was mining and to control activity, she added.

The proposed permit would apply to mining on West Beach Public Mining Area and East Beach Public Mining Area, about 320 acres. Discussion that included City administration and Port of Nome commissioners led also to requiring permits for commercial mining on state offshore leases. The Planning Commission will undertake the permit ordinance again at a meeting on May 1. They are also working on offshore zoning.

The Nome Planning Commission with input from the Port Commission suggested lowering the proposed $1,000 fee to $500 per season and made other changes to the permit:

- Do away with the set hours requirement but require mufflers to reduce engine noise.
- Require a vessel to have visible its state Annual Placer Mining Application permit number in 12 inch by one-inch letters.
- Require a permit for each vessel (operation)—not per single miner.
- Delete dates for when permits would be required and instead require that permits be in place two weeks before the mining operation begins.
- The Planning and Port commissions favored limiting the number of permits based on safety, efficient operation of the port and availability to other users and availability of sanitation. The Port Commission was to work on a number of operations to be allowed this year.

The state DNR permit for West and East beaches public mining areas has its own rules. The permit allows access to all users. Recreational miners do not own any land and may not leave markers for mining on future days. Miners must keep 75 feet distance between dredges. On East Beach miners will be limited to six-inch or less suction nozzles with no more than 18 hp pump engines. On West Beach, miners can use up to eight-inch nozzles with 36 hp engines.

Factors supporting the requirement for an additional City of Nome permit include the following:

- The state authorized mining offshore from East Beach and West Beach in May 2011.
- The state has not limited the permits in 2012 or any future year.
- The City of Nome has incurred costs and will continue to have significant costs in providing public services to the State's permit holders, many of whom are not Nome residents.
- The City needs to get a leash on sales tax on minerals extracted and sold and on permittees who have not paid Port of Nome user fees and complied with regulations. The miner with a City permit will keep records of business activity including all sales of gold or other minerals extracted from within the City even if the sale is not made in the City. The miner's books are subject to inspection by the City in concert with confidentiality laws.
- Requirements for renewal of the annual permit include being square with the City and Port of Nome as regards payment of fees and observing regulations.

In other business, the Planning Commission required Mitch Erickson, director of business development for Nome Gold Alaska, to resubmit his application for conditional use of land for an industrial campground for the upcoming gold dredge mining season.

The camp, on company property west of Nome in the Dredge 6 area, will open with the mining season and will close in mid-October. There will be no permanent structures. Mitch Erickson, business development director, has told the commission that campers can set up tents or shipping containers, but no tarp and shipping pallet shacks. Sanitation will be provided.

The land currently holds an industrial use designation under Nome's zone law, hence the need for a conditional use permit.

The planners have forwarded their Nome Comprehensive Plan 2020 to the Nome Common Council for approval.

OUT WITH THOSE PILES— Contractor ProWest is working on the removal of pilings that heave with ice movement inside Nome's small boat harbor, on Friday, April 20.

• Fishermen ask for separation of fishing and gold dredging fleet

sel. Balking at the new requirement could result in permit revocation.

Fisherman Eric Osborne addressed the commission asking for a separation of the fishing fleet and the more fragile vessels such as small dredges. "It sounds like there is gonna be a lot of little dredges and we need to be able to come in to take care of our gear and fuel and get out again," Osborne said. "The dredges were worrisome to me."

Osborne said that there are four classes of boats that compete for the same space in the harbor: fishing vessels for commercial and subsistence fishing, gold dredges and smaller sail or recreational boats. "I'm worried about sail boats and the dredges, I'm worried about my livelihood. The City Council sent us here to bring our concern to you," Osborne said.

As a solution, he proposed to have a float reserved for the fishing fleet or to assign berths to the fishing boats. Frank MacFarland agreed with Osborne and brought a different angle to the table: insurance. The port requires its users to show proof of liability insurance for vessels that carry 50 gallon or more of petroleum products on board. Vessels with less product than that can opt out and pay an additional fee on their docking permits. MacFarland said that it is ough to turn around and fuel up. dodging the small dredges. "It's scary when you're surrounded by people who don't have insurance,' MacFarland said.

Fisherman Robin Thomas also testified saying that he often arrived in the harbor after fishing trips to find that prime space was taken up by a small boat. "More than once did I came in and saw a little 16-ft. boat tied up on 40-ft. section, taking up space for three bigger boats, Thomas said. He said that the fishing boats fits the dock sections and he can get in there even when the boats are tied up three deep. "But if it's a dredge, I can't tie up because they would get damaged. If they can go on one dock and we get to another dock that would be great," Thomas

Port Commission chair Jim West acknowledged the fishermen's concerns and said that a work session to be held the following Monday, April 23 would address this. "This year is going to be a tough year, but we will figure it out and do the best we can with what we have. In future we hope to have the dredges on the west side and create separation that way," West said.

In other business, City Manager Josie Bahnke updated the commission on the capital budget that passed the 2012 Legislature and is now headed to the Governor's desk. The budget left intact $1.5 million for the South and East dock fender repair project. The Legislature changed things around and passed a transportation general obligation bond bill that will go before the voters in November. The bond proposal includes Nome port projects for $10 million. But the need for funds is much greater.

For starters, there is the need for $150 million for a deep draft port design study to ready Nome for the onslaught of increased marine traffic due to an ice-free arctic and increased resource development. Harbormaster Joy Baker distributed cost estimates from PND pegging the costs of three projects on the Nome harbor proposed improvements. The construction of the "mid" dock—another dock between the City Dock and the WestGold dock at the causeway is estimated to cost $13.5 million.

The installation of a Nome inner harbor high ramp would make it easier for barges to on-and offload goods. Also, it would allow fishermen and other boat owners to get their boats in and out of the water for repairs without having to wait on the barges until they're done loading. That high ramp project is estimated to cost $3 million and according to harbormaster Joy Baker, is moving along.

Finally, there is the project to install floats on the west side of the Snake River to harbor the gold dredging fleet at an estimated $13.7 million. This project elicited one comment from the telecommunications company GCI, which keeps its satellites on the western bank of the river

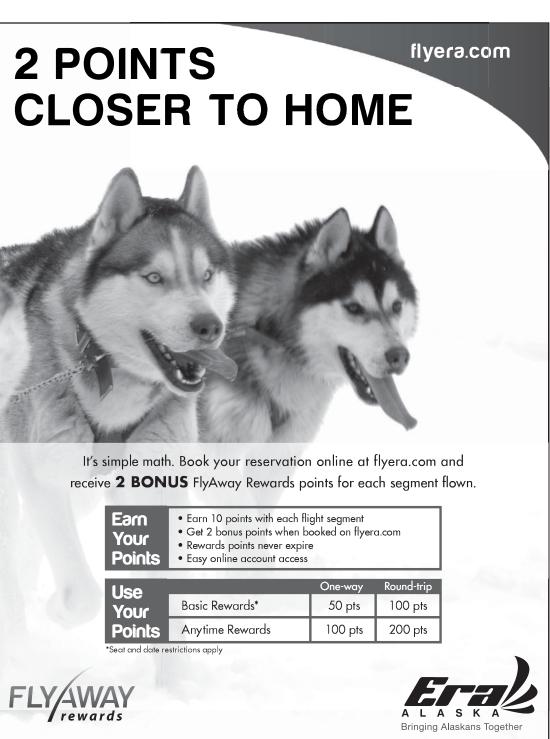

In a letter to PND, the city's engineering company, GCI expressed that they are concerned about radar interference and physical obstructions that could disrupt the satellite's reception. GCI asked if there are alternative locations to place the new harbor facilities. Baker was confident that the port officials, the commission and GCI would work together to figure out a solution.

She added that the floats project is at a standstill as the necessary permit is still being reviewed and survey questions still need to be answered. Baker updated the commission also on two ongoing harbor projects. Contractor ProWest is digging out the piling on the east dock and had no grief with two pilings, but the third piling proved to be a bit more stubborn to remove. It finally came out of the ice on Friday. The pilings hold the floating docks on the east side of the small boat harbor and are moved out of place by ice. Instead of the pilings, there will be a new system with heavy chains attached to the floats.

Baker gave an update on the removal of the barge Lulu, saying that the bow had been cut off, the concrete was removed from the deck and while the stern is still under water, the next move would be to try to break the hull free and slide the rest of the Lulu off the ice. As of Monday, the hull of the Lulu is still frozen in and Q Trucking will continue to remove the rest of the barge once the ice melts. The deadline to complete the job is not until September.

Legislators update region on 27th legislative session

Senate: Ulu News

By Sen. Donald Olson District T

Governor calls for Special Session

The day after the 90th day of regular session adjourned, Governor Sean Parnell signed a proclamation calling for a special session of the 27th Alaska Legislature in Juneau, effective Wednesday, April 18, at 1 p.m., to address oil tax legislation, an Alaska Gasline and tougher penalties for human trafficking. This means we are here for another 30 days at the most focusing on these key issues.

I heard HB 9 in my Community & Regional Affairs Committee because I want to make sure rural Alaska gets a share of the benefits of the proposed instate Natural Gasline. In this proposal, the state is spending approximately $11-15 billion to bring oil and gas to an area that already has affordable gas compared to communities in the districts I serve in rural Alaska.

Bills passed during regular session

SB 130 ALASKA NATIVE LANGUAGE PRESERVATION & ADVISORY COUNCIL

The Alaska State Legislature passed Senate Bill 130, which is intended to protect and restore Alaska Native Languages. The legislation will establish the Alaska Native Language Preservation & Advisory Council to assess the state of Alaska Native Languages, reevaluate the programs within the state, and make recommendations to the Governor and Legislature to establish new programs or reorganize the current programs

This Legislation is the most significant piece of legislation affecting Alaska Native languages since 1972 when laws were passed requiring mandatory bilingual education in state-operated schools where children speak Alaska Native languages.

The council would be comprised of 5 professional language experts from across the state appointed by the governor, plus two non-voting legislators from the Bush Caucus. The council is required to produce a report every two years with the first one due by July 1st, 2014. Senate Bill 130 now heads to Governor Parnell for his signature.

On behalf of the Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell's Historical Commission, my office is assisting with coordinating the Alaska Native Roundtable Discussion set for May 7th at the Anchorage LIO. Several key organizations involved in language efforts across the state are expected to be there as well as comments from Senators Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski and Congressman Don Young. I'm looking forward to this collaborative discussion

SB 164/SB 145 — Tax credit: Frontier Basins

SB 164 was introduced to provide for a credit against the oil and gas production tax for costs incurred in drilling certain oil and gas exploration wells in the Kotzebue basin or the Selawik basin and got rolled in other bills (SB 145) to create a larger tax credit bill called the Frontier Basin Exploration bill. SB 145 passed on the last day of session. This bill will encourage investment in oil and gas exploration projects along the Selawik Basin by providing tax credits for exploration work completed over the next few years. It is our hope that this exploration will lead to oil and gas development, ultimately reducing the cost of energy for my constituents

SB 180 — Naturally occurring asbestos in gravel

House Companion Bill 258 sponsored by Representative Joule moved quicker through committees and passed the House, thus becoming the vehicle. It is being reviewed by the Legislative Legal Services for accuracy before it is on the Governor's desk for his signature. The bill establishes a definition of Naturally Occurring Asbestos gravel/aggregate material and provides for a program that will allow the use of NOA material also passed. The passage of this bill allows communities along the Upper Kobuk to move forward on construction projects that have been delayed or stalled for many years.

Little Diomede gets huge help

In this year's Operating Budget, I was able to secure $200,000 for Little Diomede's match for their much needed and long overdue Essential Air Service program. The only item that remains for this funding to be fulfilled is the Governor's signature.

Little Diomede, a small community of about 100 hasn't had reliable passenger air service since July of 2009. Residents can only fly to the mainland for emergencies. During winter months, boat travel is limited and unsafe. Lives have been lost using boats in the past and mail service has been inconsistent. The community has no airport, unless the sea ice is thick enough in winter to clear a landing strip. The commercial helicopter that once delivered food, people and mail has not been available in years

Diomede's top priority for several years has been the Essential Air Service program, which subsidizes passenger airlines serving approximately 140 remote communities. According to the Alaska Department of Transportation, weekly helicopter service from Nome would cost more than $350,000 annually. I've been working to get Little Diomede reliable air service for several years now. I am certainly relieved to know that the community will have consistent transportation to and from the island soon. I'd also like to acknowledge the help from Kawerak Inc. and Norton Sound Health Corporation for their part in making this financial securement happen.

Alaska Arctic Policy Commission

HCR 23 carries forward recommendation of the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force

Positions state for role in U.S. and circumpolar planning and gover-

The 27th Alaska Legislature acted to help the state better prepare and position itself for growing Arctic activity and policy, passing a resolution forwarded by the House Finance Committee to create the Alaska Arctic Policy Commission.

The idea comes from a recommendation by the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force, which met over the past two years to examine how the state can work with stakeholders, other governments and interested parties to protect the state's Arctic interests.

House Concurrent Resolution 23 creates the 20-member commission within the legislature to meet over the next two years to develop an Arctic policy for the state and a strategy to implement it. The commission would present its findings to the legislature by Jan. 30, 2015.

The commission membership will include:

- Three senators selected by the President of the Senate
- Three representatives selected by the Speaker of the House
- One member of the executive branch appointed by the governor
- 13 members appointed jointly by the Senate President and House Speaker representing the following areas: the federal government, a tribal entity, the mining industry, the oil and gas industry, the marine transportation and logistics industry, a Native corporation organized under the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the marine pilots, an accredited Alaska college or university with a background in Arctic science, fisheries, local government or a local government association, a coastal community, an international Arctic organization, and a conservation group

HCR 23 passed the Senate by a vote of 18-2 and will now be filed with Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell. Copies of the AK Northern Waters Task Force Report are available at http://housemajority.org/coms/index.php?c=104

National Park and Park Monument Subsistence Resource Commissions

I'd like to acknowledge Martha Whiting and Walter Sampson for their appointment by the Governor to the National Park and Park Monument Subsistence Resource Commissions. The commissions devise and recommend to the governor and the secretary of the interior a program for subsistence hunting within the park or park monument where hunting is allowed. A commission may make subsistence hunting program recommendations regarding issues including: eligibility; customary and traditional determinations; subsistence research; subsistence access; changes in subsistence taking regulations regarding seasons, bag limits, and methods and means; and impacts to subsistence caused by development projects.

Whiting, of Kotzebue, was reappointed to the commission for the Cape Krusenstern National Monument. She has served since 2006 as the first woman mayor of the Northwest Arctic Borough, following two years working as assistant to the previous mayor. Whiting worked nine vears in Kotzebue for NANA Regional Corporation in positions including the director of the corporation's museum, executive director of its cultural education program, and director of its regional economic development program. Whiting earned a bachelor's degree in natural resource land management from Sheldon Jackson College in 1990. She was reappointed to a seat reserved for a resident of the Cape Krusenstern area.

Sampson, of Kotzebue, is a lifelong subsistence hunter who works as vice president of lands and regional affairs for NANA Regional Corporation. A veteran of the U.S. Army, he has served in the Civil Air Patrol, in local search and rescue efforts, and with Kotzebue's volunteer fire department. Sampson served as president of the Northwest Arctic Borough Assembly and vice chair of the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, and was a member of the Board of Game. He was reappointed to a seat reserved for a resident of the Kobuk Valley area. Congratulations to both Martha Whiting and Walter Sampson. Their service on the commissions will be valuable for rural Alaska especially in regards to subsistence hunting.

House of Representatives: The Foster Report

By Rep. Neal Foster, House District 39

Legislation to establish a Water & Sewer Task Force: While this did not pass it is important to elaborate on it. This is more than just a money issue. There are emerging systems and new technologies that will need to be part of the answer. In the past systems were not always properly matched to their communities, which often left the local utility with a system they could not afford or a system where they did not have the necessary expertise needed to keep it operating. We also need to ensure that we are not building ourselves a financial burden that cannot be sus-

In short the goal of the task force is to find out how the State can solve the rural sanitation problem faster, better and cheaper. We've been doing the same thing for more than 15 years and it is time to look at all alternatives. I am confident that this legislation will emerge in the 28th Legislature.

Education Funding Increase: While there seems to be a general agreement on the need for additional school funding, to help meet the increased cost of energy, insurance and employee salaries, there was not agreement on how this should be accomplished. The Senate wants to raise the Base Student Allocation (BSA) by $125, while the House Leadership and the Governor want to see the funding as a one-time grant and not a part of the BSA. The compromise legislation increased the base student amounts for student transportation and vocational education and extends vocational funding to middle school programs. Other provisions provide funding for: the Parents as Teachers program, Best Beginnings (for early childhood education), and established a funding source for the Alaska Performance Scholarship Program. The $25 million that the House included in the Capital Budget will be spread according to the funding formula, but is not added to the BSA. While the funding will help some districts, it does not begin to meet the funding shortfalls that school districts are experiencing. The legislature did address the erosion of the mill levy issue, but it does not necessarily mean that the cities or boroughs will pass the funds on to their schools.

Suicide awareness and prevention training: This legislation will require mandatory youth suicide awareness and prevention training for all school district personnel who work directly with students. Alaska has the highest rate of suicide per capita in the country, particularly among teens and young men. Tying suicide prevention efforts into teacher training in other states has helped reduce teen suicides. It is imperative that school personnel recognize the signs of at-risk youth and be prepared to intervene when they identify a problem. This is particularly important in our rural schools.

Capital and Operating Budgets: The Capital Budget which contains funding for community priorities appropriated approximately $900 million for transportation, $400 million to improve schools and education, over $200 million for projects to help reduce energy costs, and funding to help improve health care. The Operating budget continued the past trend of adding money to the State's various savings accounts. While the Operating budget had been growing at about 7 percent in recent years, the Governor and Legislature worked together to reduce that growth to around 3 percent this year. Next year's supplemental budget will be a measure of how successful this effort has been Petroleum Taxes: The Senate and House bills had significant philosophical differences about how to best incentivize oil and gas exploration and development. Oil and gas taxation is a complex issue and a compromise that was acceptable to both bodies and the Governor was not possible. The Governor has announced a special session to deal with petroleum taxes that began April 18.

Power Cost Equalization: This legislation passed through the Energy Committee, where I share the gavel. We were able to put good work into the bill lowering the expense while still providing for those in need. In the Finance Committee it was amended by adding contingency language that the bill would not go into effect without $150 Million being put into the PCE endowment. That funding didn't make it into the Capital Budget, which essentially halted all movement of the Energy Vouchers: This is another bill we worked on in Energy Committee. This bill would have distributed energy vouchers to adult residents as follows: 250 gallons of heating fuel, 1,500 KWH of electricity, 35,000 cubic feet of Natural Gas or $250 towards rent if you did not pay directly for home energy costs. We added a provision that would allow for $500 if you heated with an energy source other than those. This bill met its senate companion in House Labor and Commerce but didn't find its way to the next committee. While this bill did not pass, part of its spirit made it into the Operating Budget. The Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, which provides energy cost benefits for low income households, has been beefed up to make sure those people on the margins will have the help they need.

WASHINGTON D.C. TRIP: In early March, several members of the Alaska Legislature attended the U.S.-Canada Arctic Roundtable in Washington D.C. As the only U.S. Arctic state, it is important that Alaska take an active leadership role. It provided an opportunity for Alaskans to participate with the U.S., Canada and other Arctic nations to develop International policies that incorporate the needs of all stakeholders and create lasting benefits for our residents who live in the Arctic. Some of the topics discussed were: Alaska Northern Waters Task Force Report; Collaboration on Arctic Research; U.S. and Canada capabilities in the Arctic; and the need to develop a U.S. / Alaska

Arctic Strategy.

COPPER VALLEY ENERGY CONFERENCE: At the request of Ahtna, as the Co-Chair of House Energy, I attended the Copper River Drainage Energy Conference. While Solar, Wind and Geothermal were all mentioned the main focus of attention was biomass (in this case a fancy way of saying wood). The interior region is choked with black spruce. It is not marketable timber and is referred to "gasoline on a stick". The state and federal government spend millions each year fighting fires fueled by black spruce. A significant opportunity exists to develop a market for this resource that could at the same time reduce energy costs and help protect the environment from wild fires. Depending on how and if this market is developed it could mean heating alternatives for Western Alaska as well. If processing plants can be developed locally with reasonable operating costs, then seasonal barges could take that product down river to villages and up the coast from there. This is still in its formative stages but is an exciting opportunity.

Nome Trip: I was able to go to Nome during Iditarod where a lot of folks from the Bering Strait region were also visiting. Thank you to all of those who provided feedback on local community needs.

House District #39 Redistricting

The Superior Court decision that the Redistricting Board "Proclamation Plan" for Districts 37 & 38 did not meet the requirements of the Alaska Constitution was appealed to the State Supreme Court. The Court found that the Proclamation Plan did not follow the process specified by the Hickel v. Southeast Conference court case. The court's direction was that the plan must first satisfy the State Constitution and then be tested against the federal "Voting Rights Act" (VRA). The plan has been sent back to the Redistricting Board for further consideration. In fairly short order the board adopted a plan that returned HD 39 (more or less) to its' current form. Per the court order this plan was developed without consideration for the VRA. That plan was submitted to their expert who determined it would not satisfy the requirements of the VRA and the Department of Justice. The board made changes to that plan which returned HD 39, for all intents and purposes, to that in the original proclamation. Changes were made with regard to the Aleutian Chain and some Fairbanks districts. The revised Proclamation Plan has been adopted and has gone back to the DOJ for a preclearance review by the courts. Even if it is accepted it does not preclude further court challenges. The Supreme Court did say, "If the Board is unable to draft a plan that complies with this order in time for the 2012 elections, it may petition this court for an order that the 2012 elections be conducted using the Proclamation Plan."

Special Session

A special session was convened on April 18. On the call, set by the Governor, are three bills. HB 359 deals with sex and human trafficking. HB 9 deals with construction of an instate gas line. HB 3001 is the Governor's new oil and gas tax reform bill. HB 359 has already passed and has a broad base of support. HB 9 sets up the framework to build a gas line. It would allow the Alaska Gas line Development Corporation to peruse a deal based of market forces. HB 9 passed out of the House and is in the Senate. HB 3001 will be a hard nut to crack. All sides appear to be in agreement when it comes to dealing with new development. The sticking point is on legacy fields. The Governor wants to apply new tax breaks to legacy fields thinking that it will spur investment where it can happen fastest and have the most effect on volume. The Senate doesn't share the belief that lower taxes on legacy fields will increase production. The Governor and House leadership have indicated that an agreement addressing new production but not legacy fields is unacceptable. Both the House and Senate will be holding hearings on HB 3001 and its senate companion starting this week.

Dividends from crab vessel double for Nome women's shelter

By Tyler Rhodes NSEDC communications director

A strong commercial crab season in the distant Bering Sea in 2011 is helping ensure a regional shelter in Nome will be able to open its doors to a growing number of residents seeking its services.

An innovative partnership between the Bering Sea Women's Group, Siu Alaska Corporation and two crab boat captains has for the third consecutive year provided a distribution that helps the Bering Sea Women's Group continue its critical mission. The Bering Sea Women's Group operates a regional shelter in Nome It also maintains a crisis line and offers additional services for women, men and children who are victims of domestic and sexual Operations from the 2011 fishing season yielded the Bering Sea Women's Group $74,100 for its ownership stake in the crabbing vessel Aleutian No. 1. That is more than double the distribution for 2010, and brings the total received by the Bering Sea Women's Group through Siu and the Aleutian No. 1 to more than $121,000.

The Bering Sea Women's Group was gifted 25 percent ownership of the vessel in 2009 from Siu, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Community Development Quota entity, Norton Sound Economic Development Cor-

As the dividends from the Aleutian No. 1 have climbed over the last three years, demand for the Bering Sea Women's Group's services have grown at an even faster pace.

In the first two quarters of 2011, the shelter in Nome recorded just under 1,000 night stays. In the same time period this year, that number has skyrocketed to nearly 2,300

Bering Sea Women's Group Executive Director Samaria Ross said a large amount of the funds distributed from the Aleutian No.1 are directed to covering travel for the clients who come from other Norton Sound communities to stay at the shelter in Nome. "We definitely wouldn't have made it through this year without help from Siu and the Aleutian No. 1," said Ross. "For this year it certainly worked out well."

Another measure of the growing reliance on the Bering Sea Women's Group's services is the increasing use of safe-home representatives in communities outside of Nome. These eight representatives take in abuse victims in 10 Norton Sound communities, often while they await travel to the shelter in Nome. In all of 2011, a total of 23 clients utilized the safe-home representatives. In the first two quarters of 2012 alone, the number of clients using the service swelled nearly tenfold to 218.

The Aleutian No. 1's ability to deliver such a comparatively large distribution to the women's group this year was primarily driven by strong crab prices and a well-executed fishing season by the vessel and its crew. "Everything came together this year," said Siu Alaska president and chief executive officer John Eckels. "It's just very pleasing when you get a year like that when everything operates smoothly and you are able to then share those proceeds with the women's group.'

The arrangement has also been beneficial for NSEDC. Dividing the ownership of the Aleutian No. 1 has substantial tax benefits while also helping NSEDC fulfill its mission to support the communities and residents of the Norton Sound region. To split the ownership, a quarter of the interest in the boat was sold to its two captains. Instead of selling the remaining 25 percent, the NSEDC and Siu boards of directors sought to gift the remaining ownership to a local non-profit organization, settling on the Bering Sea

Women's Group as the recipient.

With the fishing season currently wrapped up for the Aleutian No. 1, the vessel is now slated for its regular shipyard visit which occurs every three years. While this helps ensure the boat will continue to provide distributions for the women's group and its other owners, it also means maintenance and potential repairs could impact the vessel's earnings for 2012. Nevertheless, the Aleutian No. I has proven itself to be a steady and reliable investment that should benefit the Bering Sea Women's Group, Siu and its captains for the long term.

STRAIGHT AHEAD - Daniel Olanna of Shishmaref leaves the starting line during day one of the Shishmaref Spring Carnival Open sled dog race. Olanna went on to win the race, posting the fastest time on each day.

lanna wins Shishmaref Spring Carnival sled dog race

By Nils Hahn

Last week the Shishmaref Dog Mushers Association held its annual Spring Carnival sled dog race. The race is a three-day event, run over a distance of 36 miles on each day. The trail leaves the starting line on the east side of Shishmaref, takes mushers seven miles across the wide open landscape of the lagoon to the cliffs along the mainland, follows the cliffs for another 11 miles to the mouth of the Serpentine River where it rounds a point, then doubles back to the finish line in Shishmaref.

The race was renamed several years ago in honor of Herbert Nayokpuk, "the Shishmaref Cannonball", who passed away in 2006. Herbert Nayokpuk was a revered dog musher, famous throughout Alaska. His wife Elizabeth can be seen at the start and finish line every day of the carnival races.

This year the race had near ideal conditions with temps in the teens and winds around 10 mph. Racers also reported good trail conditions. Even so the race is being run in the present wind along this exposed Arctic land.

Six teams were at the starting line with one team, Percy Nayokpuk of Shishmaref having to scratch from the race after day two.

The winner, Daniel Olanna of Shishmaref, said it was tough to train his dogs this winter due to the extreme cold. His leaders were Sunny, Black Jack and Curl. Olanna posted the fastest time on all three days. All of the dogs he bred and raised himself, the bloodlines go back to dogs from famous Fur Rendezvous racer Bill Kornmueller of Willow as well as the legendary musher Carl Huntington of Galena.

THE NOME NUGGET

Second place went to another icon of the sport, Joe Garnie of Teller.

Third place went to Jeffrey Nayokpuk of Shishmaref, son of the late Herbert Nayokpuk.

Results (elapsed times from three day racing)

Daniel Olanna, Shishmaref: 7:54:29; 2. Joe Garnie, Teller: 8:15:41; 3. Jeffrey Nayokpuk, Shishmaref 8:36:17; 4. Alfred "Koozi" Ningeulook, Shishmaref: 9:12:10; 5. Helen Marie Sinnok, Shishmaref: 9:12:10; 5. maref: 10:06:06; Percy Nayokpuk, Shishmaref: scratch on day 3. Sportsmanship Award: Alfred by Hank Irelan On April 13th and 14th the Nome Nanooks competed in the Dillingham NYO invitational which included the teams of the South West Regional School District. Total participants were 80 athletes who competed in the 10 Senior NYO events. Nome's team of five had many medal performances from its seniors Jens Irelan and Caitlyn Tozier in addition to another medal or two from sophomore Hannah Tozier.

Nanook seniors propel Nome NYO to second place

Personal bests from all team members were achieved with especially strong gains from Andrea Irrigoo and Oliver Hoogendorn. This tournament wrapped up a season with the most ever meets. The Nanook NYO team participated in the Bethel Invitational, the Nanook Virtual Invitational, The Nome Native Games Extravaganza, the Dillingham invitational and on April 27, 28 and 29 the State NYO meet.

In an NYO meet like Dillingham's the girls and guys compete simultaneously which started with the kneel jump. At the girls end Caitlyn's best was nine inches short of first, however both Andrea Irrigoo and Hannah Tozier put in their best effort of the season and personal bests. On the boys' end Jens was well behind first but Oliver again put in his best of the season and a personal best. The next event which was not a strength of this year's team was the wrist carry. Let's just go to the next event.

Now we are getting to the Nanook strength. Finishing coach and world record holder in the Alaskan high kick, Elijah Cabinboy has been working with the team to get them into medal contention. Andrea Irrigoo for the second time this season makes the qualifying height for the Alaskan high kick. Hannah Tozier pushes her best to 52 inches and for third place Caitlyn Tozier goes to 60 inches. On the boys side of the gym Oliver Hoogendorn gets a personal best at 54 inches and then Jens Irelan tops the competition with first and 78 inches.

The Eskimo Stick pull turned out to be a surprise event for Nome but not on the boy's side. Caitlyn Tozier moved through the pulls with ease until she ran into two time state champ Rae Rae of Dillingham. Catlyn's pulls stopped at third place and a big surprise for the team. After all that it was time to eat a wonderful dinner of many forms of salmon, moose and berries! Refreshed and nourished with nature's best the Nanooks took to the court again.

Now the Nanooks participated in an event designed to save your life on an ice flow. A skill used to this day by walrus and seal hunters or those taking a cruise in an ice field, the toe kick. The results on the boys end would mean some very cold boys on a hunt but the girls were another thing all together. Caitlyn and Sister Hannah flicked their way to second and third in the event.

The last event of the first day was the two foot high kick. On the girls end Caitlyn used some of her new found skill from Elijah and finished fourth with 54 inches. Jens on the other hand kept going higher and higher and higher until he out jumped the rest of the boys at 83 inches and first place. Off to the assigned classroom to sleep.

The team was up early Saturday to a breakfast of bacon, eggs and pancakes and the first event which utilizes Crisco. You take a stick and grease it with Crisco then you and your opponent grab it and pull. This is like you're pulling fish from a fish wheel. This event can fool you. It cannot be assumed the big man wins.

On the girl's end experienced Indian stick puller Caitlyn pulled her way to third. Her field again had past state champions in it. On the boys side Jens was able to out pull most of the fisherman from the Bristol Bay Region but one, for a second place finish. The next event of Saturday is like the toe kick in that an athlete can often be happy with just being able to do it. The one hand reach again turned out to be a surprise. Caitlyn who has had success at WEIO in the reach was able to stretch her way to third place at 46 inches and the surprise was Jens squeezing out 50 inches for fourth place.

Hannah pushes herself to 62 inches in the one foot high kick, a new personal best. This meant that Sister Caitlyn had to go to 54 inches and bragging rights of the Nanooks best one footer female that is. Jens' competition had a field with Arctic Winter games performers at 96 inches, last year's fifth place and many other one footers able to medal at state. The competition was intense, spirited and wonderful to watch. Jens vs. Kendall Alvarado in the final heights. At 100 inches Robert Blue of Togiak, Kendall of Dillingham, Noah Pavella of Stuyahok were all tied. With four left they moved on up to 104 inches. Then the feet started missing the mark. Jens made it with one miss and Kendall resoundly kicked the 104. This left Jens and Kendal to try 105 inches.

This time Jens nailed the ball and Kendall was all around it. Jens wins with the 105 hit and then tries for 106. In the regulation three kicks at 106 Jens was close and around it but missed it. He did the traditional kick after the pressure is all off and pounded the 106 inch height through the ball.

By Keith Conger

Nome Ski and Biathlon concluded a 10th season with its 6th annual Ski-2-Sea "biathlon" race. Although during the competition season the team competes in biathlons that combine skiing and target shooting, this event joined a snow section up Gold Hill, with a road section to the Bering Sea.

Anchorage's Josh Mumm used the fastest skate ski time (11:00), to turn in the top unaided solo result of the day. He completed a two-mile ski and a two-mile run in a combined 25:07. Participants who ran the whole race by themselves had their transition time (equipment and shoe changes) added to their running por-

The fastest team time went to sophomore Rosa Schmidt and Nome-Beltz alumni Crystal Tobuk, who joined forces to complete the course in 26:39. Schmidt posted the fastest ski split for females at 14:19, and Tobuk the fastest female running split at 12:20.

The spirit of fun in the Ski-2-Sea was exemplified by the various transportation modes. Local winter biker Mark Cardinal brought out his special, designed-for-snow "fat tire" bike, and cruised across the snowy tundra and snow free road in 21:21.

Skijoring was also represented in this year's event. The team's youngest member, 10-year old Mallory Conger, zipped around the ski course with two dogs in 9:53, while Recreational Team coach Janet Balice skijored the course with one dog in 15:00.

The Ski-2-Sea is a Nome Ski and Biathlon fundraising race that celebrates the transition in seasons by saying good-bye to skiing while at the same time welcoming running, biking, and hiking. The current coastal venue has been in place the past four years, but the initial races were held on Newton Peak and included a bike ride to town.

This year's Ski-2-Sea race marshal was assistant ski coach Annie Nome Ski and Biathlon is a part of an after school program run by Nome Community Schools. Well over 40 children, ages 9 – 18, participate annually.

Three ski choices are offered each year: a Race Program, a Recreational Ski Program, and a youth Beginning to Ski Program. Skiing typically begins in December for the racers, and concludes the last week of April with the youngest skiers.

Despite the cold brought on by the winter of 2012, this year's high school girls team won their division at the rural state meet. The leader of that squad, senior Caity Tozier, became the fourth member in the 10year history of the program to earn an individual rural state title.

BSSD: NYO has something for all

By Jeffrey Erickson

Native Youth Olympics is an inclusive event. It allows the dreams of all athletes to thrive. There are events for the tall, the larger and powerful, those of slight build and good hand grip, and those who can master events of finesse. In no other athletic arena do you see a 4'10", 130 lb. athlete dominate a head to head contest with a 6', 200 lb, competitor like in Indian Stick Pull. Length helps but leaping ability and flexibility allow shorter athletes to compete in the high kicks. All were on display in Golovin during the 2012 Bering Strait School District NYO championships.

With several returning champions expectations were high for some impressive results and no one was disappointed when hometown favorite and 2011 Most Outstanding Female Athlete, Tahnee Esparza, won the Alaskan High Kick, tying the district record of 67" in the process. Jonisha Wilson then kicked a district recordtying length in the Toe Kick and two time gold medalist, and reigning state champion Apaay Campbell quickly followed with a new district record of 48.5" in the Kneel Jump.

The high kicks are crowd favorites and this year was no different as reigning Most Outstanding athletes Esparza and Stuart Towarak soared above the rest, both breaking district records in the process. Towarak's 93" obliterated the old record of 90" as he continued to reach unprecedented heights.

The evening session featured the One Foot High kick, which features the amazing athletes who can leap to incredible heights. It is also the event that so many of the younger kids can attempt with some level of safety, as opposed to the Two Foot which requires both legs kicking the ball. Towarak had a goal in his sights and he didn't disappoint as he easily broke his previous record with an amazing leap of 110". The Indian Stick pull was intriguing as a more aggressive style, now allowed by state organizers, prevailed and the bouts were quick and powerful.

The events Saturday morning were exhibitions of pure power as brawn prevailed in the Eskimo Stick pull. Defending champion Iris Billingsley went through the bracket without a loss and, though new to the sport, Carl Crockett dispatched all comers for the boys. The Seal Hop is always the event that completes the championships and there were many stirring performances. In the end Unalakleet's Aucha Johnson won the boys and to culminate the top female performance in the history of the BSSD NYO games, Esparza won her 4th gold medal.

Champions from each event will represent the BSSD at the State meet April 27-30 in Anchorage.

the seal hop. Hannah set a personal best and Jens beat his best and obtained a first place in the seal hop. So the total medal count of Jens' four first, a second and a fifth, Caitlyn's one second, three 3ds, and 4th, then adding Hannah's one third made a second place total and some major excitement going into the State tournament in Anchorage on the 27th, 28th and 29th of April. Exercise: A smart move

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Exercise is good for your brain. In fact, research tells us that a daily dose of physical activity is more effective than any pill, procedure, or other therapy in protecting brain. Daily physical activity keeps the brain young and prevents, or at least greatly slows, the progression of Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia.

Doctors use the term "cognitive health" to describe a person's brain function. Risk factors for poor cognitive health or cognitive decline include diseases like diabetes mellitus, high blood pressure, heart disease. obesity, and high cholesterol. Sur-coalition has not formed and NEST - geared to offer chronic inebriates a safe place to overnight – is pursuing a wellness center for Nome. NEST only addresses a very small segment of Nome's population, but that segment may be growing as families lose their apartments due to a change in ownership of outside interests.

What do Nome residents want?

Nomeites, responding to a survey held in 2010 that is included in the Nome Comprehensive Plan 2020, identified quality of life goals that listed as a high priority to address alcohol abuse in town. It prioritized to lend support to NEST and the effort to get a wellness and sobering center off the ground in Nome. Another goal identifies " a balanced and diverse supply of affordable, quality housing with amenities and infrastructure that reflect Nome's social, cultural and physical environment."

The way to get there? A strategy outlined in the plan is to consider lowering the mill rate for first-time homeowners and to consider a onetime waiver of building permit fees for new homeowners. Yet another strategy suggested to encourage property owners of vacant commercial buildings to fix them up and fill

The plan identifies that educational and health services comprise the greatest percentage of workers in Nome with 27 percent. Then are trade, transportation and utilities at 22 percent. Local and state governments trail with 14 to 12 percent, respectively.

The planning commission has recommended for the Nome Common Council to adopt the plan and the item was on the regular council meeting agenda for Monday, April 23, but the council did take no actions on any planning and zoning isprisingly, research is showing that a lack of exercise is just as ominous as any of these other known threats to the brain.

Researchers have long recognized the benefits of daily physical activity on cognitive brain function. Over a decade ago, scientists at the Salk Institute in California published the results of a then-groundbreaking study showing that exercise stimulates the creation of new brain cells.

Further research shows that the brain gets larger, faster, and maybe even younger when exposed to exercise.

For example, according to a study published in 2006 in the Journal of Gerontology, older adults can increase brain volume with regular exercise. In this study, Magnetic Resonance Imaging (MRI) scans of the participants' brains were obtained before the study and again after six months of either daily physical activity or merely remaining sedentary. The brains of the group engaged in daily aerobic activity not only showed a resistance to the normal age-related decline in volume; their brains actually increased in volume. This included an increase in both grey matter and white matter, suggesting a capacity for improvement in both cognitive function and reaction time. In other words, investment in daily exercise has the same effect on the brain as a person's purchasing a new computer with a larger hard drive and faster Internet connection speed.

LOCAL

Exercise may even make the brain younger. A recent study of females over age 65 showed that women who participated in at least 30 minutes of daily exercise (equivalent to brisk walking) were "cognitively" 5 to 7 years younger than women who were more sedentary.

A new study published earlier this month in the journal Neurology found that active older individuals reduced the risk of Alzheimer's disease by 53 percent compared to sedentary individuals.

The benefits are not just for older generations. According to scientists at the University of Illinois, college students who exercised on a treadmill for 30 minutes improved their reaction time and short-term memory. Students who merely lifted weights or rested quietly for the same amount of time showed no improvement.

The best physical activity for the brain appears to be aerobic exercises. Aerobic exercises include sustained activities that require moderate exertion like brisk walking, light jogging, lap swimming, dog mushing, kayaking or bike riding. Experts from the American College of Sports Medicine and the American Heart Association recommend all adults get at least 30 minutes of aerobic physical activity five days a week.

Most medications for preventing cognitive decline are expensive and have unwanted side effects. This might be acceptable if the medications were known to work well. But, frankly, the success of medication for protecting the brain is very limited.

Exercise on the other hand, especially moderate aerobic activity, may prove to be a better therapy. It is still expensive: it requires 30 minutes of your time daily. Side effects may include usually sedentary muscles getting sore and rusty joints aching while being reconditioned for daily activity. But exercise has proven to work. It is a daily investment in brain health as well as body

When it comes to preventing cognitive decline exercise is a smart

School Board wrangles with budget

By Lori Head Budget particulars

After fretting over potential increases to health insurance rates similar to last year's 39 percent increase, NPS received some good news. Aetna rates would increase by a mere 3.1 percent. Previously budgeted as a 15 percent increase, the revision put $167,329 back in the coffers. Alaska USA Insurance Brokers did state in a letter to the district, "...please bear in mind that Aetna reserves the right to a mid-year increase if claims experience under the Polysub group so warrants," and offered their services in finding a competitively priced alternative if Aetna's rates substantially increased.

The board also bumped up the requested amount of additional funds from the city by $132,730 for a total of $906,730. Funding from the state was whittled down by $80,449 due to three less intensive students. However, factoring recent resignations and new hires, salaries decreased by a total of $48,306 from the first proposed budget. And finally, rather than taking $454,948 from the fund balance, the latest budget required $185,224 to balance.

The FY13 budget salaries were based on the district's last offer of a 2.5 percent increase on certificated salaries and a 2 percent increase on classified salaries. Utilities, electrical rates and worker's compensation insurance were increased by 15 percent. As for personnel, three new positions were added: an elementary teacher, elementary aide and Director of Special Programs. Subject to change on the budget — almost anything — but more specifically staffing needs due to increases or decreases of student numbers or legislators sending revenue Nome's way.

Budget items were still being considered at the April 24 regular meeting

Norman Kiasuk Atuk

Norman Kiasuk Atuk, first child of Walter and Virginia Atuk, was born in the family home at Cape Prince of Wales on August 6, 1933. Norman died March 28, 2012 in Nome. He leaves to celebrate his life and mourn his passing his children Norma Ann Benjamin, Norman Atuk Jr., Kevin Atuk, Janis Lynn Atuk Jones, brothers and sisters Laura Hunter, Richard, Alice Atuk, Rose Atuk Fosdick, and Caroline Atuk-Derrick, his aunties Lilly, Grace, Reba and Sophie, grandchildren, and many nieces, nephews, friends and relatives.

He was preceded in death by his grandparents Louis and Adele Tungwenuk and Henry and Viola Enisingwok, parents Walter Atuk and Virginia Ayona Atuk, his children Jeffrey and Jody, his siblings Linda, Clara May, Gladys, Eugene, Ellen and Samuel.

The Atuk family moved to Nome from Wales in 1947 after they spent the winter in Sinruk enroute to Nome.

Norman attended Nome Public Schools. He married Anna Wilkalkia of Nome and with their first child Norma Ann relocated to Redwood City, California where the rest of the children were born.

His relocation was through the Indian Relocation Program. In California he received training in TV repair and carpet-laying and learned to love bowling. He was certified as an ironworker and became a member of the Ironworkers Union and worked many years in the trade he enjoyed until he retired; his last ironwork was at the Nome Joint Utility power plant. When he was a little boy he told his grandparents, he would make money sitting down.

Norman loved to be out in the country, whether out camping, boating, snow machining or hiking. He told many stories about his experiences in the country to his family and friends. He was always looking for ways to make work easier, somewhat of an inventor.

He loved to go hunting for marine mammals, moose and game birds; and enjoyed fishing in the spring, summer, fall and winter. He shared his harvest with family and elders in Nome. He showed his sisters how to put away the catch and find the greens and berries.

Norman joined the US Army and served two years at Fort Richardson. Later he joined the Alaska National Guard in Nome where he played on the Guard team in City league basketball.

Norman spent his last six months at Quyana Care Center in the loving care of the nurses, doctors, and nursing home staff. Burial will be late spring/early summer at the Nome cemetery.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev Ross Tozzi, St Joseph Parish Member of the Nome Ministerial Society Peace be with you

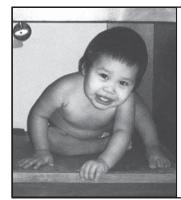

The Lord has risen from the dead. In numerous other places following his resurrection, Jesus appeared to the disciples. They should have been filled with joy but they were often spooked by his presence. Jesus asked his close friends, "Why are you troubled? Why do questions arise in your hearts?" Are we very different from the disciples? Aren't we often just as worried and troubled over daily events as they were?

Jesus encouraged them with a warm greeting, "Peace be with you." Jesus also offered a number of practical suggestions to calm their fears. "Look at my hands and my feet, that it is I myself. Touch me and see, because a ghost does not have flesh and bones as you can see I have." Gazing on the wounds of Christ is one way we can come to peace of mind. A few years ago when I lived in the Interior, we were doing some renovations to the church. Everything was taken out of the church, there were no seats the carpet was gone. What was left was the shell of a building, Only one thing remained. Jesus still hung from the cross. A troubled woman came into pray. Her mom had just died and she was very sad. Her faith told her to believe in life after death, but she was still distraught. In the empty church she prayed and gaze on the wounds of Jesus. A little while later, a little time gazing on the wounds of Jesus, and she was able to be at peace and to accept the death of her mother.

Rising from the dead didn't take away Jesus' hunger. He often appeared and asked for a little sustenance. When he asked them, "Have you anything here to eat?" they fed him baked fish and he enjoyed their company. Meals are not simply about feeding a physical hunger. The spirit can be fed as well when we share stories, when we spend time with one another, when we take time to experience communion with one another. Meals are time for soul soothing fellowship whether we dine with our families or share a meal with a neighbor. It is a simple and very natural way to quiet a troubled heart.

When are you troubled? When do questions arise in your hearts? Jesus also helped to open the minds of his disciples by helping them to understand the Scriptures. Jesus can open our minds too if we give him the opportunity. We are called to pick up the Bible and to read it, or for the young or old who may not know how to read, to have someone read the Scriptures for us. Having listened to the Word of God, a little time in meditation can then help us to be at peace. Many of the problems and worries of daily life are easier to deal with once we've given God the opportunity to open our minds.

Jesus asked the disciples who saw him after his death to be witnesses. The same holds for us. God offers us the peace of Christ so that we may share that peace with others. How will you do that? When a friend or family member is troubled, will you invite them to gaze on the wounds of Christ? Can you take time to share a little baked fish with someone who is hungry? Never pass up a potluck as an opportunity to share in fellowship and communion with someone who is grieving. And when someone tells you their worries and problems, is it not an invitation to share a little from the wisdom of God found in Holy Scripture?

In Loving Memory Christopher George Johnson-Ozenna

June 17, 2007-April 27, 2009 You will forever be in our hearts.

Love your mom, dad, brother & sister.

On April 14, at about 1:35 a.m., the Brevig Mission VPO received a complaint that Devon Olanna had kicked in the outer arctic entry door of a Brevig Mission residence and he was trying to get inside the house. Devon Olanna, 22, of Brevig Mission, was arrested for probation violation and transported to Nome where he was lodged at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center on no bail.

On April 16, Nome Alaska State Troopers re-ceived a report that a female passenger on local air carrier was in possession of alcohol in Gambell. Gambell is a local option community where the sale, importation and possession of alcohol are banned. Investigation determined that the 28-year-old resident of Savoonga purchased the al-cohol in Nome and transported the alcohol in her backpack. The suspect has been twice convicted of misdemeanor alcohol importation within the last 15 years. A case report will be forwarded to the Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals refer-ring a charge of Felony Alcohol Importation. The Felony charge is due to her prior convictions.

On April 20, at 12:20 p.m. AST arrested a 15year-old juvenile from Savoonga with an arrest warrant for a felony offense. The juvenile was remanded to the Nome Youth Facility.

On April 20, at 1:20 p.m. AST arrested a 17year-old juvenile from Savoonga for probation vi-olation. The juvenile was remanded to the Nome

On April 20, at 4:15 p.m. AST arrested Lorraine Saccheus, 26, of Elim, for violating conditions of release and probation violation. Saccheus was remanded to AMCC.

On April 20, at 5:30 p.m., AST arrested Nancy Kiyuklook, 30, of Savoonga, for probation viola-tion. Kiyuklook was in Nome without a travel permit and had consumed alcohol, both of which violated her conditions of probation. Kiyuklook was remanded to AMCC.

Delta Western to haul NJU's fuel

By Sandra Medearis

Nome Joint Utility System has signed a contract with Delta Western to deliver the fuel to run power generators next winter. NJUS directors skimmed the document at the April 17 board meeting.

According to the contract document signed by NJUS manager John K. Handeland, NJUS expects to receive between 1,600,000 and 2,200,000 gallons this next barge season. NJUS will determine the exact number of gallons and notify DW within three days of loading, according to the contract document. NJUS will pay $3.3872 per gallon. The price includes all product loading, lifting, transportation, cargo insurance, dyeing, and off-loading expense. NJUS will pay normal dockage, wharfage, and port charges imposed on the vessels or the cargo. If additional charges result from delay or other actions of DW, then DW will pay those charges.

The contract price could go up or down if the BTU value per gallon turns out to be less than 137,000 BTUs per gallon, in which case it will be reduced, or if the Oil Price Information Service average Spot price reported for each day of the month of delivery exceeds or falls below $3.0572 per gallon for Ultra Low Sulfur Diesel. If the OPIS average does vary for any particular delivery, the contract price of $3.3872 will go up or down according to the difference between the contract price and $3.0572.

The contract contains a 16-item list dealing with specifications concerning quality. The fuel must remain liquid down to -35°F and be clear, bright and free of visible particulates. The Ultra Low sulfur Diesel fuel must not vary from specific sulfur content, necessary for NJUS to meet environmental requirements.

At loading, an independent testing laboratory will verify the quality of fuel delivered to DW by its supplier.

Delta Western is currently involved in a court action due to failure to deliver to Bonanza Fuel last fall, after which Bonanza contracted with a third party to deliver fuel by an ice class Russian tanker under USCG ice breaker escort. Delta claims in court documents that a force majeure in this case, an act of God or the elements-storm or sea ice-made delivery impossible and cancelled the contract.

The NJUS contract with DW contains the standard language that failure of either party to perform will not be a breach of obligations if the delay or failure is because of acts of God, strikes or labor troubles, changes in applicable laws or regulations, fire, flood, windstorm, explosion or earthquake; riot, war; sabotage or hostilities; court injunction or orders, or any other unforeseeable cause outside the control of NJUS or DW. In the event DW's performance is delayed, diminished or prevented, NJUS can terminate the contract and seek substitute performance or have DW deliver after the unpreventable condition has ended. According to the contract document, if NJUS had to seek an alternative delivery, DW would be liable for compensating NJUS for fuel already paid for and also for the difference in cost above the agreed price from DW.

In other business, Handeland told the utility panel there was little likelihood that NJUS would be liable for broken pipes this past winter. Historically, insurance companies had denied such claims. With natural thawing, "it is a far reach to hold the utility responsible," Handeland said.

The utility has planned an extensive Sclaircore pipe replacement and repair this summer, funded by state money from the capital budget and DEC grants accepted at the April 17 meeting. Some of the work sites include Lomen Avenue, lower and upper Belmont Point on Prospect, M Street, East Third Avenue, East Fourth Avenue, Tobuk Alley, AC Store, Bering and Seppala, Kings Place and Spokane.

Nome stars shine in "Just another high school play"

Photos and story by Diana Haecker

Comedy was in order for this year's production of the Nome Beltz Drama Club and six high school students showed their sense of humor in Bryan Starchman's play "Just another High School Play."

The curtain opens and a confused stage manager played by Mary Ruud stumbles out. It's a play about high school students putting on a play, but things go wrong. The drama club's director has abandoned ship, headed for Mexico and left hanging on opening night a cast of unprepared drama actors, who didn't show up for rehearsals.

What to do?

The stage manager Mary and assistant director, played with a great sense of humor by Beth Herzner, are clamoring to elicit improvised performances from their cast played by Brian MacDougald, Dawn Wehde, Miranda Murphy and James Jorgensen. Also participating in one scene was assistant director Matty Guiffré.

Herzner and Ruud find a box with old scripts, toss them at the actors and what ensues are comical interpretations of several well-known plays, an abbreviated journey through world drama, including a quick trip through contemporary melodrama in 60 seconds. Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" for example is turned into a puppet show as for the lack of actors illustrated with cutouts of Justin Bieber, a Disney Princess, Prince and Batman. To top it all, Brian MacDougal and the Gang invoked Dicken's Scrooge and the Ghosts of Christmas Past, Present, and Future when they rapped "A Christmas Carol."

Scherer, who won't be here next year to guide the next crop of actors to greatness on stage, is moving to Anchorage. She got to play in the last scene of the comedy. She stumbles on stage, disheveled hair, shoe in hand and furious demeanor. As it turns out, the director hasn't abandoned her actors after all, but assistant director Herzner had locked her in the trunk of a car to spoil the show and steal the limelight for an evening.

Two cops drag Herzner off stage and the play is over, with the audience still laughing.

OH NO! — A live audience is waiting for show to open and Mary Ruud, playing the stage manager in "Just another High School Play" is realizing that the cast is on their own since the director seemingly abandoned them

THE SCROOGE RAP— Dawn Wehde, Beth Herzner, Miranda Murphy, James Jorgensen and Brian MacDougald deliver a quite unique version of "A Christmas Carol."

BUSTED—The assistant director, played by Beth Herzner, is placed under arrest by "officers" James Jorgensen, left, and Brian MacDougald, right.

Four candidates vie to become new NW Campus director

By Diana Haecker

The search for a new director of the University of Alaska's Northwest Campus has produced four candidates who are about to be interviewed telephonically by a hiring committee this week. According to Vice Chancellor for Rural, Community and Native Education Bernice Joseph, 11 applicants originally threw their hat in the ring to fill the open position.

Joseph said that the hiring committee cast the net wide by advertising state and nationwide. The four candidates who advanced into the next round are yet unnamed applicants, but Joseph said three are from Alaska, one person is from out-of-state. The hiring committee has scheduled onsite interviews in Nome with the remaining candidates for mid-May. Candidates will be participating in community and campus meetings and the public has a chance to weigh in by attending the public presentations of the candidates and filling out a score sheets.

The position became vacant when former campus director Linda Lee Haugen resigned late October 2011 after she was charged with misconduct involving a controlled substance for sending marijuana from Colorado to herself in Nome. In the interim, Bob Metcalf served as acting campus director.

ROMEO AND JULIET — Brian MacDougald, left, and Miranda Murphy, both assuming the roles of various Romeo and Juliet characters, are guided by puppeteer Dawn Wehde in their rendition of the famous Shakespear drama.

Did so, did not, say Bonanza, Delta Western in fuel flap

By Sandra L. Medearis

Bonanza Fuel and Delta Western are tugging a rope in a contest to get a lawsuit and countersuit into their courts of choice.

The legal battle centers on compensation and responsibility for 1.3 million gallons of fuel that did not flow into Bonanza's tank farm in Nome last fall to satisfy Bonanza's winter retail needs. Bonanza in February filed a suit in state court—in Nome Second District Superior Court— against bulk fuel suppliers Delta Western, asking for $1.5 million. That's how much money Bonanza said it had to pay extra to get fuel from a third party and bring it to Nome mid-winter via the Russianflagged tanker Renda under USCG icebreaker escort after a Delta Western barge shipment failed to arrive.

Delta Western has maintained that "the worst weather Nome has seen" excused Delta Western's inability to deliver the fuel. And besides that, Bonanza was not cooperative in achieving a solution, Delta Western said in court documents.

Soon after Bonanza filed suit, Seattle-based Delta Western filed suit and served notice it was moving the case to U.S. District court in Seattle, saying the issue fell under federal maritime admiralty law pertaining to transportation over navigable waters and that the amount sought by Bonanza moved it out of state court jurisdiction. Additionally, Delta Western filed a countersuit asking the case be dismissed or moved to Seattle according to court documents filed in U.S. District Court.

Jason Evans, board chair at Sitnasuak Native Corp., owners of Bonanza fuel, declined to comment in detail on the ongoing case, but said he foresees a long haul, that the parties are not even started to get started.

"What I will say is that we are at the beginning of what I anticipate will be a lengthy legal battle," Evans said. "The courts are currently at the very preliminary stage of determining which jurisdiction will hear this case—whether it will be Nome or Seattle, federal or state court. You could say that we have not yet even reached the trailhead in this long legal journey."

Delta Western in court documents said it should not be held accountable for bad weather and ice in the harbor. Delta Western has filed a complaint for declaratory relief to "protect Delta Western from any liability arising out of Delta Western's inability to deliver fuel to defendant Bonanza Fuel, Inc., due to extreme emergency weather conditions in Western Alaska in the fall of 2011."

The case was closed in state court on Apr. 3 and removed to federal court with copies of the documents to date.

Delta Western delivered half the fuel supply to Bonanza in mid-summer 2011, with two more deliveries on the fall schedule.

Bonanza Fuel executives say Delta Western breached a contract to

During Kawerak Inc.'s Regional conference last week in Nome, one meeting in particular drew a roomful of participants who were united in one goal: enhancing salmon runs to Norton Sound. That common goal however did not mean that all were in unity on how to get the task accomplished.

The Regional Planning Team meeting lasted from mid-morning until mid-afternoon, and had a two-fold effect: it served as an opportunity for fishermen and subsistence fishers to vent their frustrations and it was producing a start on updating the 1996 comprehensive salmon plan for the Norton Sound region.

A new alliance between Sitnasuak Native Corporation and Nome Eskimo Community crystallized as Sitnasuak president Chuck Fagerstrom and NEC's tribal resources director Mike Sloan stepped up and said that they were joining forces to support the Regional Planning Team's, RPTfor short, process to enhance salmon runs in Norton Sound.

The morning session was exclusively spent on public testimony. There were calls to restart the Hobson Creek experimental central incubation facility again. Leo Rasmussen offered a doom-and-gloom outlook that discounted fish counting efforts. "I don't see what counting does, other than to show that the fish are not here," Rasmussen said.

Ron Josephson sits on every RPT meeting statewide. He is with the ADF&G Fisheries Monitoring, Permitting and Development section and he summarized the problem: Nobody knows why the fish do not

DOT gears up for summer construction projects

By Diana Haecker

With construction season coming up, the Alaska Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities is planning several projects at the Nome airport. One project entails the repair of a dip on the west-end of the main runway. DOT spokeswoman Meadow Bailey said that the dip is due to settling and that it started to show up last summer. "Currently jets are breaking hard to stop in advance of the dip, they try to avoid it," said Bailey.

The project was put out for bid this week and work should be completed during this summer season. The repair is slated to take two to four weeks, depending on weather. The estimated costs run between $1 million and $2.5 million. Bailey said that during repairs, jet traffic would be rerouted to an alternative runway.

The second project is the replacement of the Snake River Bridge and the construction of a road connecting the bridge to Jafet Road to Port Road and the realignment of Seppala Drive to accommodate the turning traffic movements from the new Snake River Bridge. This project is out for bid right now, with bid envelopes to be opened May 8.

Bailey said that there would be continued on page 13

Letters

Dear Editor,

One of the richest companies on this planet hit a submerged object neglecting to follow the danger on the navigation chart —like all barge vessels do in the pilothouse. A large tanker spilled more than 11 million gallons of crude oil in the dead of the night on March 24, 1989. It was the largest oil spill in U.S. history and its remote location was accessible only by airplanes and a boat in plain site. It was a difficult place for a clean up

A week later many miles of contaminated shoreline; the wide spread devastation to wild life, and it also destroyed the livelihoods of many who depended on fishing and subsistence food gathering. I have been in many oil spills in land and water, little as they are.

It had been a long time since the Exxon Oil Spill and clean up efforts in other parts of U.S. is still ineffectual as ever.

May more drilling vessels will be in the Arctic Ocean this summer, the stage is being set, like before, many outsiders will be sort of pushing away villages and the western Alaska lifestyle, "take the money and leave again.'

In deep water offshore drilling responders will face nighttime darkness and icy conditions, ice fogs that lasts a long time and hurricane-force winds. Yet this decision is being made from many thousand miles away and involving an area many more miles from the nearest U.S. Coast Guard Station.

Western Alaska does not have sufficient personnel or equipment in the region capable of carrying out an effective plan of cleaning up offshore. 'No one even knows how to build an Igloo."

'Where are our Representatives?" Respectfully, Gabriel Myomick

Anchorage, Alaska 99507

To the Mayor, Nome Common council, Nome Port council and the community of Nome:

I want to go on record so in the event of an injury or fatality it cannot be said that the problem of safety on behalf of the public specifically the children who play at Belmont Point Prospect Place was not addressed. First I would like to congratulate our Port commission and the city for doing such a great job in implementing a new ordinance on the use of the port and recreation area on the Snake River area at Belmont Point.

The final result was to benefit both the dredging miners and the subsistence recreation community equally with a permanent protected launching area for boats, designated area for recreation and a newly graded and prepared area for vehicles, trailers and equipment with regulation related to noise after 10 p.m.

It was a wonderful thing last summer to see elders and others able to fish and launch hoats as was its historical use for decades. However people with trucks and trailers after launching still need to park in the designated area — not on top of the recreation and fishing area, south of the boat launch ramp. Also the mining dredges need to pay attention to the tide tables and realize that low tides will leave them grounded if not anchored in deeper water. Last year many of the dredges depart at midnight to 4 am in the dark. Several of the dredges that were consistently ground had vehicles with no mufflers desperately trying to push their equipment out to water causing an extreme amount of noise to those of us who have to work the next day. The tide tables are published but possibly radio and even a friendly posting in advance will help.

With regards to the possibility of injury or death related to the children the issue of slowing traffic upon the entrance to Prospect place has worsened greatly especially during the early dredging season. Many of the miners driving unlicensed vehicles are rushing down Belmont Point Prospect Place at a high rate of speed way too fast to stop in time to avoid hitting children playing. Signage is inadequate and law enforcement does not have the time or staff to control this. Our taxicabs are also driving too fast in this area.

THE NOME NUGGET

There is a simple and low cost solution to this. On the following pages I have identified the key areas that need to have temporary speed control humps installed. These are low cost easy to install with spikes and can be removed in winter each year. Three rows of these need to be installed in two key areas that will require people entering and leaving the area to slow down. We must install humps that are at least 4 inches or more high—the 2 inch will not slow traffic enough to make the driver look ahead and slow down. Sincerely,

Daniel J. Scholten Belmont Point Community

Democracy on the Cheap

Times are changing and they are changing fast. The globalization of the Arctic is at our doorstep and we are sitting at the chokepoint for access to the Arctic. We need to know that what happens in the Arctic does not stay in the Arctic. We are boots on the ground when it comes to Arctic policy, yet state and federal agencies and officials seem to forget that we live here.

State and federal governments have been known to put out a silent call for public comment, they don't announce their public comment period. Maybe they don't really want to hear what we have to say. Some government agencies take it upon themselves to consider their policy is uncontroversial so they don't bother to invite public comment. They do our thinking for us. Gee, how thoughtful. Some agencies think they can get away with putting their proposals on their obscure government-run web site that is out of the picture for the ordinary citizen. Some agencies claim that public notices are not in their budget. Penny-wise and pound-foolish comes to mind.

It is important for western Alaskans to stay informed and have a participatory democracy where it counts: where money is spent, policy is made, and futures charted. We need to be vocal and demand that our city, state and federal governments publicize public notices. Transparency in government is precious. We can't let them get away with democracy on the cheep. Illegitimus non carborundum The Nome Nugget

LEPC discusses summer mining season

By Diana Haecker

Almost no public meeting in Nome goes by without one item on the agenda that reads like this "Summer: beach/offshore mining." The Local Emergency Planning Committee is the latest public body to tackle the issue of an unknown number of miners headed for Nome this summer and how the City should prepare for the onslaught.

"We already had two [miner-related] medevacs so far," said LEPC co-chair Tom Vaden, alluding to a miner living in a shanty at West Beach that in mid-winter burned down. The man escaped the flames but had to be flown to a special burn center in Seattle for treatment. The other incident involved a miner driving his four-wheeler too fast and he ended up in an Anchorage hospital bed. The LEPC is interested in the public health and safety aspects. City manager Josie Bahnke and harbormaster Joy Baker were on hand to provide updates and information to the LEPC. Bahnke said that a city permit to be issued to miners is still under review. She also said that the city is declaring the shanties on West Beach nuisance structures that need to come down. This brings up a bigger question. "We need to ramp up efforts to determine what needs to be permitted and what not," Bahnke said. One solution frequently pointed to is the proposed industrial campground on Nome Gold Alaska land. As the first miners may already be getting ready for their trip North, the camp ground is still in the planning stages. Bahnke said that Nome Gold business manager Mitch Erickson did apply for a conditional use permit. This was necessary because current city zoning laws don't make mention of campgrounds and although the planning commission supported the idea, they asked Erickson to fill out a newly formatted conditional use permit.

From past experience of miners setting up camp on Gold Company land on West Beach - in past years, Alaska Gold Company allowed campers to squat on the beach for $200 - Charlie Lean asked if Nomeites need to expect more public health issues stemming from human waste on the tundra and on Middle Beach. "That was the idea behind declaring the shanties nuisance buildings," Bahnke said.

What about safety around the water and the harbor? Harbormaster Joy Baker briefed the commission on what's going on in her territory. "There are more miners on the DNR permitting list than we have space for," she summarized the situation. While Baker stressed that there are a lot of variables such as daily traffic, weather and barge traffic that influences how much space there is in the harbor on any given day, the fact is that there is only so much square footage that can safely be filled. She advises miners who arrive with smaller dredges to bring a trailer and a vehicle to pull their vessels out of the water.

In other business, Vaden remarked that the Nome-Golovin snowmachine race highlighted a shortcoming between the Alaska State Troopers and the Nome Police Department: They still cannot talk to each other in an emergency. "The troopers and police communication is not interoperable," Vaden said. The issue is that troopers mostly communicate via cell phones, whereas Nome police use their radios. Charlie Lean said that radios become important in instances such as spatially drawn out races or similar events and emergencies. Vaden added that it would be helpful to put a few more frequencies on the radio devices so that police and troopers can talk to each other without having to use cell phones that may not be working out in the country.

Former Alaska State Trooper Sergeant Andrew Merrill and NPD Chief John Papasodora have started on discussion on how to remedy that. "We are aligning our radio system to improve communications between Nome police and us," confirmed Merrill's successor, Sergeant Charlie

November storm damages Council Highway

By Diana Haecker

Long after the historic November 2011 hurricane-force storm tore through the region the damage is now resurfacing with melting snowcover and snow removal. The Dept. of Transportation has contracted with Rich Contracting out of Anchorage to perform emergency repairs to the Nome-Council Highway. While the DOT crews have cut through the snow up to the Safety Roadhouse near mile 22, DOT Western Region superintendent Evan Booth cautions that there is a damaged section at mile 16 and after that the road is not in good shape either. Booth said that there is extensive road damage from the Safety Roadhouse all the way to Solomon. "In some sections the road is littered with debris, driftwood and rocks, other sections of the road are just gone and totally washed out," Booth said. "The road is unrecognizable in some parts, it's just gone and looks just like the beach." For now, the contractors are doing emergency repairs to the tune of $9 million, fronted by the DOT's general fund. The DOT will be reimbursed by the federal Highway Administration. The purpose is to get the road first back to how it was pre-storm damage and Booth hopes to get permanent repairs done in the future. The DOT is in the process to work on the East fork of the Solomon River to continue snow removal there. Booth hopes that by the time the emergency repairs are done to fill in the sand-traps and unpassable spots, the snow removal crew also has finished their work and that the road could be opened by the end of May. "We're doing everything we can to open the roads up, so we ask the public to please be patient during the reconstruction," Booth said. The DOT asks motorists to watch for road crews and that light traffic is not advisable beyond Cape Nome.

Other roads in the area are also being worked on. The DOT has completely cleared the Dexter Pass road. The Nome-Taylor Highway is open up to mile 17. Nome drivers can cruise along the Teller Highway up to mile 13 and on the Teller side it is open to mile 58.

complete 2011 fuel deliveries as promised, with the last two deliveries due in the first week of September and last week of October.

Bonanza in its suit claims breach of contract for failing to sell and deliver the remaining 1.3 million gallons of fuel as required by contract, before the Nome harbor iced over. According to the Bonanza complaint filed in court, "Delta Western's breach and repudiation has caused Bonanza Fuel damages in an amount to be proved at trial but greatly exceeding $1,500,000, the difference between what Bonanza Fuel would have paid Delta Western and what Bonanza Fuel paid Vitus Marine, plus all incidental and consequential damages, and for which Delta Western is fully reliable.'

In March 2011, Bonanza sought bids on delivery of home heating fuel, diesel fuel and gasoline—total about 2,850,000 gallons subject to change, making it clear that the fuel would have to be delivered during the summer barge season—June, July, August-September timeframe, before the harbor iced over. Delta Western, the company that had supplied Bonanza's fuel for five previous years, received the bid again on April 5. Bonanza subsequently changed the amount to 3,215,000 gallons.

On July 1, Delta Western delivered approximately 1,850,000 gallons of fuels, or 58 percent of Bonanza's contracted requirements for 2011, according to court documents, for which Bonanza paid "more than $6,600,000", according to court documents. "Later in July, and then again several times in early and mid-August, Bonanza Fuel repeatedly asked Delta Western when the remaining approximately 1.3 million gallons combined of home heating fuel, diesel and gasoline would be delivered..." Bonanza said in its claim in court. On Aug. 23, Delta Western con-

On Aug. 23, Detta Western confirmed it would deliver the remaining approximate 1.3 million gallons of fuel in two separate barge sailings, the first between Sept. 1-5 and the last barge coming in late October, late in the barge season. By Sept. 8, DW had failed to make the first of final fuel deliveries, but promised to combine the two last deliveries as a single delivery in late October, according to Bonanza claims. Bonanza told Delta Western that after Nov. 1, the harbor would be frozen up [barring barge traffic until late spring]. Bonanza waited.

The Delta Western fuel barge arrived in late October. Between Nov. 8-10, following DW's delivery deadline, a fall storm whipped the Nome region. Several days later, a cold snap suddenly froze the harbor.

Bonanza claims that on Dec. 2, Delta Western "repudiated [deny the truth or validity of]" its contractual obligations, "wrongfully claiming it was excused from having to perform its agreements by force majeure and impracticality of performance and falsely claiming that Bonanza had failed to cooperate…" [Force majeure? Literally, "greater force" sometimes used in legal clauses saying neither party shall be liable for failure or delay in performance if the delay or failure is caused by conditions beyond its control, for example, natural disasters, war, labor disputes]

Left high and 42 percent dry of its planned fuel supply for winter and spring, Bonanza contracted with Vitus Marine to supply the remaining fuel requirements. Vitus Marine contracted with the Russian-flagged ice-class tank vessel Renda to deliver the missing fuel to Nome harbor under escort with USCG icebreaker Healy. Beneath the swoop of a media feeding frenzy, Vitus Marine and the USCG made the first ever winter fuel delivery to Nome.

According to court documents, Delta Western said Bonanza Fuel declined the delivery in September because of congestion at the Nome port and saying the company wanted to wait until fuel tanks were drained down further to avoid having to buy higher-priced fuel eventually from Crowley Maritime. Furthermore, Bonanza was not helpful in solving the delivery dilemma, John Cannon, Delta Western's vice president in charge of sales and distribution, said in a Dec. 2 letter to Scot Henderson, Bonanza's fuel manager.

In the same letter, Cannon said a second fall delivery was "impractical and therefore excused, we are nonetheless working very hard with the USCG, the state, Nome officials, tanker companies, tug companies, oil traders, and competitors as a team to identify assets and create a solution to this problem."

Cannon said in the letter "we have gone to Nome and offered to voluntarily contribute approximately $800,000 to offset delivery costs."

Evans said in a November interview that Delta Western had offered compensation, but that the amount was inadequate and unfair to Sitnasuak's shareholders.

"Your offers have not come close to paying for all the damages [Bonanza] has sustained," David Hoffman, Sitnasuak's CEO, said in a Feb. 24 letter to Amy Humphreys, president of Delta Western.

Among court documents in the case, Hoffman has provided an itemized account—without invoices—of the $1,554,455.40 that Bonanza said it had cost to get the fuel to Nome by Plan B, through Vitus Marine, an Anchorage company that contracted the Russian ice-class tanker Renda to fetch fuel from South Korea and Dutch Harbor through more than 300 miles of ice-clad sea in December Layers.

Humphreys of Delta Western said in court documents that the company wanted to see invoices for the amounts for which Bonanza was seeking reimbursement.

The charges comprise a column each for outlay by Bonanza and Sitnasuak, and include $1,456,984 for fuel purchases, $26,212 for supplies and snowmachine rentals, Wells

Fargo banking fees, City of Nome services, AC Store and Airport Pizza food costs, plus legal expenses.

Evans, when asked specifically if obligations to City of Nome had been paid, said they had been.

Delta Western attorneys claim that the contract agreement between Delta Western and Bonanza gives Delta Western the right to select the forum for resolving disputes revolving around the fuel agreement. That forum should be in Seattle, Delta Western said in court filings. The courts have yet to rule on the issue.

WHO PAYS? —The Russian ice-class Renda, with assistance from USCG icebreaker Healy, offloaded 1.3 million gallons of fuel to Bonanza's tank farm Jan. 16-18, after fuel supplier Delta Western's barge did not arrive. The winter delivery cost $1.5 million over what Bonanza would have paid with normal seasonal delivery, Bonanza claims. The two companies are at war over who should absorb the extra cost. The first battle centers on which court should hear the case—federal or state.

come back as they used to. "I understand salmon runs have diminished, but I don't think hatcheries are the only solution. Something else is going on. We're only looking at one little tool, but to sustain the fishery, we need to unravel what is really happening," Josephson said.

Background

The Regional Planning Team is made up of three members with the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game and three members appointed by the Regional Aquaculture Association. In this region, the newly re-named Northern Bering Sea Regional

Tim Smith and Sam Rabung

Aquaculture Association – formerly known as the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association is the body recognized by the ADF&G Commissioner to represent the region's salmon users. The president is Oscar Takak Sr., who along with Charlie Lean and Roy Ashenfelter, is a voting member on the RPT. Respectively, they are also director and personnel at the regional CDQ group, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. Tim Smith with the Nome Fishermen's Association, Tom Sparks with the BLM and Rose Fosdick with Kawerak Inc. are ex-officio or non-voting members of the RPT.

Long years of adversity between NSEDC and Tim Smith, politics and a controversy over the Alaska Fish and Game Hobson Creek experimental salmon egg incubation facility managed by Smith, created tension in the meeting. Smith had challenged validity of the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association under Oscar Takak as being the officially recognized RAA to represent the region's salmon users at the RPT. Smith was and still is president of a regional aquaculture association and a nonprofit organization bearing the same name after he had tried to resurrect the RAA after its directors have failed to file proper paperwork to keep it active and in good standing.

Years of confusion had muddied the waters and split the fishing community into separate camps. With the expiration of the 1996 to 2010 comprehensive salmon plan, and salmon runs that don't satisfy the region's needs, the effort to tackle a new plan gained momentum. Most recently, ADF&G reconfirmed the validity of the NS/BS RAA presided over by Oscar Takak that two weeks ago changed its name to Northern Bering Sea RAA. There were no RPT meetings held since 2006 until the recent meetings in February and last week

Sam Rabung, the RPT's non-voting chairman explained that all salmon enhancement activities are guided by the comprehensive salmon plan. According to Alaska statutes, the RPT is the body that decides on the plan and the RAAs are the body channeling the local voice, desire and input, authorized by the very top officer of ADF&G.

While the meeting and public testimony skirted the issues that have

Chuck Fagerstrom

caused frictions in the past, Chuck Fagerstrom, president of Sitnasuak issued a call for unity and without naming names, asked of a "certain individual to not alienate himself from the RPT process." Louie Green Jr. then clarified and suggested to not perpetuate the Harry-Potter-Syndrome of the-one-who-cannot-be-named, but to take the bull by the horns. He addressed Tim Smith and said that more fish is the goal and to get there, it takes all the tools in the tool box, including Tim Smith and his expertise.

The existing experimental facility at Hobson Creek is located on Sitnasuak land and its buildings and infrastructure now belong to Sitna-Fagerstrom said in an interview that now is the time to come up with an action plan. "The situation for the last 20 or 30 years is such that fish runs have been poor and one individual has advocated for more fish enhancement and I think everyone agrees with that. We're all on board. We need to develop a proper plan, one that everybody is comfortable with, one that the state is willing to support and one that agencies with dollars are willing to fund. And we want to work with everybody. It's not only our goal at Sitnasuak, but it's everybody's goal to get more fish in our rivers," Fagerstrom said.

Mike Sloan, tribal resources director with Nome Eskimo Community said that NEC's members are dependent on subsistence and healthy fishery resources. "We are very supportive of the RPT process and the newly renamed aquaculture association and the efforts by Sitnasuak and others to move forward on fish enhancements," Sloan said.

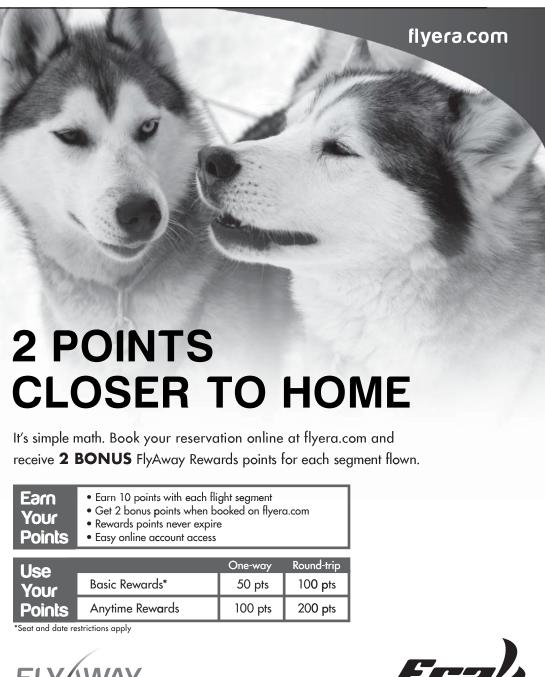

Enhancement projects – past nd present

Louie Green Jr. defended the use of Hobson Creek to produce data to get to the bottom of where the salmon that originate from Norton Sound actually go. He argued that with the use of otolith (ear bones) marked fish, it could be actually proven if Norton Sound salmon are intercepted and die as bycatch in trawl nets. "Hobson Creek could actually answer some questions and get us some results and unless we do this, we sit in the dark as we have in the past 30 years," Green said. "There were $5 million dropped into this area for salmon research and restoration. NSEDC spent $17 million on studies. When are we going to see results of these studies?"

Tim Smith said that the previous plan didn't do much in terms of returning fish to Norton Sound Rivers. "I don't think we used the plan for

School Board approves FY13 proposed budget

By Kristine McRae

In a work session followed by a special board meeting last Tuesday, the Nome Board of Education met to discuss the 2012-2013 school year budget. But before they got down to discussing next year's numbers, the members had a couple of visitors. First, Chuck Fagerstrom, the president of Sitnasuak Native Corporation presented the JROTC with a check for $100,000 again this year.

Next to address the board was Nome-Beltz Junior High math and art teacher Kevin Busk. Busk had prepared for the board a table which compiled the current Math Levels of each of the 7th and 8th grade students along with days absent and the corresponding percentage of missed school time. The students were identified only as "7th Grade Student" or "8th Grade Student." Busk's compilation shows a correlation between attendance and math levels.

Busk pointed out a couple of individual statistics that illuminated his point. One student, who had not missed any days during a single semester, was able to jump two math levels. Similarly, a student whose attendance in 170 days has been 33.3 percent is performing math skills at a first grade level. The math levels were determined by the February MAP test scores.

Busk's message to the board was simple and twofold. "My concern is that it's a challenge for the teachers and for the students; what can be our success rate if we don't have students attend school?" Busk said.

The board then moved into discussion about the budget. Superintendent Mike Brawner and Business Manager Cathy Wojtanek fielded questions from present board members Betsy Brennan, Jennifer Reader, and Barb Amarok. Although not yet in the current figures for next year's budget, Brawner explained a potential increase in monies that would come through the city. In an effort to provide stimulus to city governments, he told the board, the state legislature has lowered the required mill rate from 4 to 2.65, thereby giving the city extra dollars that are intended as an incentive for the purpose of education.

The decrease of 1.35 translates into a $171,342.00 savings for the City of Nome. According to the proposed budget, Nome Public Schools is asking the City for $1,944,462.00 for FY13, an increase of $180,715.00 over last year. However, Brawner continued, if the City used the intended funds for education, then, in effect, NPS would only be requesting $9,373.00 more this year.

Brawner's hope is that the legislature will act on the municipality monies before June 1 so the City can plan their budget. At that time the budget would be amended. The Nome Common Council plans to have a joint work session with the NPS, tentatively scheduled for May 7.

Board member Jennifer Reader wondered whether, if the state money came through, the board would consider putting money back into student travel, which had not been renewed at the usual 10 percent (roughly $16,000). Members Amarok, Reader, and Brennan then discussed with Brawner other uses for the money. Brawner offered that the funds will likely be used for "mutually beneficial projects," such as LED lights, swimming pool repairs, and capital projects. Using the extra state funds for these kinds of projects would free up other NPS monies for direct education services.

Following what Mr. Busk had reported earlier in the session, board member Barb Amarok offered that, while she does support adding an amount to student travel, if students were performing at grade level, they would attend more school, and therefore enjoy school more.

The board concluded their work session portion of the evening and convened in a special session, intended to approve the proposed FY13 budget. Before they voted, however, Nome-Beltz wrestling Coach Dudley Holmevig addressed the board with some comments on the student travel budget. His concern is that when students have to spend time fundraising for athletic trips, they lose out on study times, which lowers their grades. "We qualified ten students for state this year," Holmevig told the board, "and the money only covers two airfares. If there's an educational value to athletics, and I think there is, then the school board needs to support it. Kids get better grades when they're in sports."

Holmevig said that he does build in study time during travel, adding also that the community dollars don't go as far as they used to because so many organizations solicit money for travel.

Prior to the vote to adapt the proposed budget, board member Barb Amarok stated she would like to see the board revisit the travel money figures.

The board then voted to approve the FY13 budget and submit it to the City with the understanding that the proposed changes are not included.

Board members expressed gratitude and appreciation to Superintendant Brawner and NPS Business Manager Cathy Wojtanek for their hard work on the budget and for seeking funding for the district.

NANOOK BAND AND CHOIR— Nome-Beltz Choir and Band students pose for a photo after participating in the final concert of the regional music festival in Kotzebue on Saturday night. Medals were given to the band students who were chosen for the Regional Honor Band. Medals were also given to all participating seniors.

Beltz music students win big in Regional Music Festival

Twenty-eight Nome-Beltz band and choir students recently returned from the Regional Music Festival in Kotzebue. Both Nome-Beltz band and choir students stood out in their performing events. It was a wonderful weekend for Nome students.

Nome's band students made up the majority of the Regional Honor Band this year. Nineteen out of the 35 students in the Honor Band were from Nome.

Twenty-three Nome-Beltz students performed a solo during adjudications with six qualifying for the State Solo/Ensemble event. Eight outstanding soloists were asked to perform during the Command Performance event and six were Nome students.

This was an outstanding weekend for Nome-Beltz music students. They returned home with a great feeling of Nanook accomplishment and pride. Below are the students who participated in the regional event.

nothing. I'm afraid the same is going to happen this time around," Smith said. He agreed with Green on utilizing the otolyth marking strategy to find out where the fish get intercepted. "The salmon stock identification program failed. I'm with Louie, that if we put out marked fish, we will get more answers," Smith said.

The experimental incubation facility at Hobson Creek that Smith managed had reared pink, coho and chum salmon eggs that were released as fry during the three years it was operational and permitted. But there were no evaluations done to determine the return. Rabung said that ADF&G has not received yet a permit application for Hobson Creek and only last week received permit applications for various NSEDC projects.

Fishery biologist Charlie Lean said that NSEDC runs enhancement programs that include experimental mist incubation projects and fertilization projects. For the past five years, NSEDC has been fertilizing Salmon Lake to enhance sockeye salmon runs. Yet sockeye runs have crashed in the past few years, only to show a slight comeback last year. The astounding fact, ADF&G's Jim Menard points out, is that both populations in Salmon Lake, which has been fertilized, and Glacial Lake, which wasn't, have simultaneously shown bad runs.

In another project, NSEDC's Charlie Lean had applied for a permit and reached a cooperative agreement with ADF&G to remove eggs from Snake River chum, incubate and later release them as fry, to take coho salmon from the Snake River and to put them in Anvil Creek and to remove chum from the Solomon River and release fry there. A new project is to take Chinook salmon — if there are enough to return— from the Unalakleet River and place them into the South River.

In other testimony Perry Mendenhall cautioned that the tool box should not only include hatcheries but also stream rehabilitation and restoration after mining companies have gone through them and destroyed habitat.

Rabung said that the legislature has appropriated $500,000 in the ADF&G operational budget for salmon enhancement projects, with

$49,000 going to Norton Sound projects – if they survive the governor's red pen

What's next?

Rabung said after the meeting that he felt a little disappointed that the group didn't get much work done updating the actual plan. "But I think the consensus was that everybody has the desire to have more fish," Rabung said. "All differences aside, this is the thing that unites everybody. What we try to do is develop a description of the unmet need and a list of potential projects to fill those needs. That's the goal," Rabung said.

The meeting ended with the decision that Rabung, Lean and Jim Menard would flesh out a draft of the comprehensive salmon plan, take it back to the RTP, collect input from that body and take the result as a starting point for discussion to the 16 Norton Sound and Bering Strait communities to gather local input this summer. "We want to ask the locals what their unmet needs are and what has to be done to meet the needs," Rabung said.

Muskox hunt changed to Tier II on Seward Peninsula

The Nome office of the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game announced that the Seward Peninsula muskox hunts in units 22B, 22C, 22D and 23 Southwest slid into Tier II for the 2012-2013 regulatory year.

The tier II situation limits the total number of permits issued.

ADF&G will announce the number in May.

Hunters need to apply between May 1 and May 31. ADF&G biologists decided to limit the muskox hunt to Tier II permits after population surveys conducted in March found a decline in muskox groups compared to the 2010 survey. The wildlife managers deducted from composition surveys that the proportion of mature bulls and yearlings is too low

ADF&G regulations require that if muskox numbers fall below the amounts necessary for subsistence users, hunting must be restricted to Tier II permit holders. The conservation measure is taken to help reverse the declining trend.

All Tier II and Tier I are limited to bulls. No airplane may be used to fly to the herds and trophies (horns) must be destroyed.

AIRSA

Alaska Independent Retailers Strategic Alliance

Have you ever wondered why your locally owned native stores have such high retail prices? Or how large multi-chain corporations in rural Alaska can rake in millions of dollars each year while the villages suffer through economic decline?

Although shipping plays a large role in the cost of goods in rural Alaska, the biggest single cause of high prices for independent native stores is purchasing power. Large retail outfits in rural Alaska have huge purchasing power but have no incentive to lower costs due to the lack of competition. One independent store cannot make a difference, but many stores standing together can help lower the prices in rural Alaska for everyone.

AIRSA is a buying alliance started with the sole purpose of helping independent stores in rural Alaska to band together and lower the prices in their communities.

The average rural household income is $24,000 a year. So every penny that we can save the rural communities means something. Call your local store and ask them to look into AIRSA. Together, we can make a difference!

Member Services

Negotiated rates with suppliers -

We represent your business when we work with wholesalers and vendors to get you the best prices available. We compare prices from every source so you don't have to.

Direct Purchases -

We go to the same show buys as the big store chains do and buy direct for the rural independent and native owned stores. This allows our members to get seasonal product at the same price, allowing for a true competitive market.

Shipping and Product Tracking -

We track orders from start to finish so members don't have to. From the time it leaves the supplier to the time it reaches your door. We will also file vendor credits or bypass complaints on your stores behalf.

Management Training -

We offer training in Operations, Inventory Control, Expense control, Pricing Strategies, WIC and Ordering. We also offer workshops such as Purchasing for Profit and Controlling Shrink.

Business Consulting -

Writing a Business Plan, New Store Setup, or helping a existing store or business become more profitable. We can provide years of Rural Alaska business experience to help your company grow.

ESKIMO DANCING — Little Diomede dancers are accompanied by Diomede and King Island drummers during the Kawerak Regional Conference celebration on Thursday night.

Navigate for success steers theme of Kawerak Inc.'s Regional Conference

By Diana Haecker

The three-day regional conference hosted by Kawerak Inc. brought together more than 500 people from the region to listen, engage and ponder strategies for already occurring fast changes that are about to descend on the Arctic and Bering Strait region. Climate-change induced sea ice loss forces animals and their hunters to adapt, sea ice free Arctic waters in the summer invite shipping conglomerates to take advantage of shorter shipping routes over the top of the world and resource companies are jockeying for position to exploit the oil and gas riches that were once locked up by ice.

The agenda of Kawerak's conference reflected that reality as expert speakers were lined up to discuss safeguarding the Bering Strait Environment, navigation products, presentations by the Coast Guard on their operations in the Arctic this summer and by Rep. Reggie Joule and City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels on the findings of the state's Northern Waters Task Force. Fisheries issues were also brought to the forefront as the Regional Planning Team met for an update on a new comprehensive salmon plan at the conference (see separate story).

Parallel tracks offered workshops dealing with traditional knowledge, wellness issues including a presentation on NSHC's proposed Sobering and Wellness Center, tribal doctors and social issues such as foster care.

Ross Coen, former Climate Change policy analyst for the late Senator Ted Stevens, gave a presentation on the history of ocean laws as the question frequently comes of who owns the waters of the Bering Strait. Answer: As an international strait, everybody does and no ship, no matter how huge or filled with whatever cargo, needs to let locals know that it's coming through.

Coen said that Canada under Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau assumed the role of guardian for the Arctic and advancing the cause of marine legislation. Trudeau proclaimed Canada's role as protector of Arctic waters on behalf of all the world's people as his administration has recognized the worldwide importance of the Arctic.

Coen also informed the audience about a section in the U.N. Convention on the Law of the Sea that deals with ice covered waters. It says, "Coastal States have the right to adopt and enforce non-discriminatory laws and regulations for the prevention, reduction and control of marine pollution from vessels in icecovered areas within the limits of the exclusive economic zone, where particularly severe climatic conditions and the presence of ice covering such areas for most of the year create obstructions or exceptional hazards to navigation, and pollution of the marine environment could cause major harm to or irreversible disturbance of the ecological balance." This would put the State of Alaska in a position to take charge of her destiny, but the United States' Senate has vet to ratify the 1982 Law of the Sea Convention.

A lively discussion ensued during a workshop on Government-to-Government relations between federally recognized tribes and the federal government. The Obama administration has vowed to strengthen federal consultations with tribes, but even though the will is there, a way has yet to be found.

Dr. Kathryn Mengerink with the Ocean program at the Environmental Law Institute was tasked to develop recommendations to improve the tribal government-to-federal government consultation process in the Arctic. During her workshop that invited testimony, she got an earful.

The government's approach is paternalistic, for one, said Melanie Bahnke. "How would you feel about it if your spouse asks you if you agree to painting the house purple. You don't like it, but you have been consulted and the house is going to be painted purple. That's how consultations with the government feel like. Consultations have no teeth," Bahnke said. "We need a tribal member at the decision making process, otherwise it's a paternalistic ap-inviting information, the agencies need to produce meaningful documents that are understandable to the layman, instead of swamping tribes with loads of data that is impossible to interpret. Come up with one policy for all agencies instead of having to follow different bureaucratic rules for each federal entity. Produce follow-up documents after tribal consultations and force the agencies to provide meaningful reports.

As tribes often get invitations to far-away meetings that may as well happen on the moon as far as realistically getting there goes, Bahnke suggested to initiate one annual gathering of key federal agencies such as National Marine Fisheries Service, US Fish and Wildlife, Bureau of Ocean Energy, BLM, US Coast Guard, the Environmental Protection Agency and the US Corps of Engineers. The gathering should take place in Alaska and be well publicized in advance with enough time to adequately prepare for the discus-

Robert Keith of Elim remarked that some agencies, for instance, the Army Corps of Engineers don't follow tribal consultation recommendations. The National Marine Fishery Service doesn't have a tribal consultation policy either. "There is a great deal of inconsistency," Keith said. "Some dump massive amounts of information on us and how to interpret all that data is beyond me and people in the villages."

The BIA didn't get a good review either. "The BIA will consult with you but do what they want anyway," Keith said. "It's more a notification than a consultation."

Evening entertainment

A definite highlight between presentations and at evening performances were Annie Aningmiuq and Cynthia Pitsiulak, two Canadian throat singers from Nunavut. They delighted the audiences with traditional throat songs that resembled at times throat singing of Tibetan monks or the sound of the Australian didgeridoo. During their performances, they faced each other, locked arms and elicited layers of voices and sounds to the point where the audience couldn't tell who is singing which part. In a mosquito song, the tiny buzz of the little insects came alive. In a song about a little sled dog that wanted to be hooked up, the excitement of hooking up an excited dog team became alive in their voices. They performed under the name of Katajjaq Duo.

The evenings were filled with Eskimo dancing and performances of the Little Diomede Dancers, the King Island Dancers, the Gambell Dance group, Savoonga drummers and dancers, White Mountain dancers. On Tuesday night, Pamyua treated Nomeites to a concert and a special tribute was paid to Loretta Bullard, who is about to retire from 21 years of serving as Kawerak's president. Current vice-president Melanie Bahnke will take over the reigns as president after Bullard's retirement

How to prevent the brittle bones of osteoporosis

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Osteoporosis is a dangerous condition in which bones have lost a significant amount of calcium and have become less dense. Bones become brittle when they lose density, which thereby increases the risk that a person will break a bone in what otherwise would seem like a minor accident.

It is common for people with osteoporosis to break an ankle, wrist, hip, or vertebrae from a minor twisting fall or slip on the ice.

Bone is living tissue that stores calcium. Just as the body puts extra calories in fat cells for use during periods of fasting, the body stores extra calcium in the bones for use when dietary calcium is low. This is why consuming calcium helps strengthen bones.

Bones also respond to stress or weight. Bones that bear weight become stronger while bones become weak with lack of use. The phrase "use it or lose it" applies to bones just as it applies to muscles and brain cells.

Certain hormones, like estrogen and vitamin D, play an important role in maintaining a balance of calcium in the bone. A drop in estrogen levels, as when women go through menopause, or low vitamin D levels from lack of sunlight or salmon consumption, accelerate calcium loss from the bones.

Sometimes bone loss is a side effect of medical treatments. For example, steroid therapy for an autoimmune disease or medical treatment for hypothyroidism can lead to bone loss. Long-term use of the birth control shot Depo-Provera has also been associated with bone density loss.

Tobacco use and high levels of alcohol consumption prevent the body from properly absorbing calcium. This leads to bone loss in smokers and people who drink alcohol in ex-

It is important to remember that osteoporosis does not develop quickly. Bone density is lost over a span of years, even decades, before falling to the critically low levels of osteoporosis.

And since bone is always in a state of change, being built up or broken down, it is never too early or too late in life to work on building strong bones.

There are several simple ways to build bone strength. These measures help prevent osteoporosis and may even be used to prevent further bone loss in people who have already been diagnosed with osteoporosis.

First, make sure you consume plenty of calcium. This is especially important for teenage girls, pregnant women, and women menopause. Calcium is found in dairy foods like milk, cheese, and yogurt. Vegetables like broccoli, cabbage, bok choy, and kale are rich in calcium. Many cereals, breads, and some juices are fortified with calcium. Čalcium supplements are also available over the counter for people who cannot get enough calcium from the diet.

Next, get your vitamin D. Vitamin D is a hormone that the body uses to reg-DOCTOR ulate calcium absorption bone. repair Low levels of vitamin D prevent calcium in the diet from being properly absorbed. Therefore, vitamin D from the diet or from mid-summer sunlight exposure is just as important as calcium consumption for bone health. Salmon contains high levels of both calcium and vitamin D making it a perfect food for building healthy bones. Vitamin D supplements are available over the counter for people who do not get enough in the diet or lack adequate mid-summer sunlight exposure.

Finally, exercise is an important part of bone health. Weight bearing exercises and strength training are especially important as we get older because the body stores more calcium in bones that are bearing weight or bones being used to support working muscles.

Doctors use a special X-ray test called a Dual Energy X-ray Absorptiometry (DXA) scan to test bone density and screen for osteoporosis. In general, a DXA scan is recommended for all women over age 65 and anyone, men or women, with increased risk factors for osteoporosis. Risk factors include low vitamin D levels, unusual fractures, family history of osteoporosis, or long-term therapy for thyroid disease or autoimmune diseases.

Doctors use a number of medications to slow the process of osteoporosis in people with advanced bone loss. These medications all have potentially serious side effects and therefore require a prescription and close follow up. If you have ad-

Prevention, however, is inexpensive, easy to apply, and has very few side effects. Find ways to incorporate dairy, salmon, and exercise into your daily routine in order to lower your risk of osteoporosis and maintain healthy bones.

In Loving Memory Of Bonnie June Johnson June 30, 1935 - May 8, 2007

The funny, beautiful and eccentric lady That will always mean so much to me, May be gone from the Alaska she loved so dear But with me she will always be near.

My memory will never wither of the time I spent with her. And I will always cherish the morals that she laid before us. Because a women like my grandma Is rare and hard to find.

On May 25th, is my high school graduation, I will be carrying you in my heart. I know you will be with me in spirit on that day. I've become the lady that would make you so very proud. You will forever be missed and I will always love you Grandma Bonnie June. ~ Amanda June Patrick

Comments About Judges Needed

We need your help! State law requires the Alaska Judicial Council to evaluate the performance of judges and justices who will be on the ballot this fall (see list below). The Council will recommend whether Alaskans should vote to retain these judges and justices for another term. Your experience will help us to make these recommendations. We've asked jurors, attorneys, police officers, court employees, and social workers, but we would like to hear from you.

You may share your experience by attending a public hearing on Weds. May 9th at your local Legislative Information Office (locations listed below). You may also write to us at the address below or send an e-mail.

some preparation work done this summer, but it's up to the contractor what month construction will start. The new bridge and road are to be finished by October 1, 2013.

Last but not least, the Nome Airport Safety Area Improvements have undergone changes again and a public meeting is scheduled for May 16 to present the latest plans and a draft environmental assessment to the Nome public. The project's intent is to bring the airport runways into compliance with Federal Aviation Administration's standards. The improvements are aimed to beef up safety measures in case airplanes undershoot, overrun or veer off the run-

The FAA design standards identify that safety areas around runways

(such as found in Nome) should be 500 feet wide and should extend 1,000 ft beyond each runway end. That is not the case at this time. The proposed action is to widen the runway safety area along both runways, build an "engineered materials arresting system", EMAS for short, at the west end of the main runway and shift the crosswind runway 600 feet to the north, among other things. The EMAS is to stop an aircraft overrun as the plane is slowed down by the loss of energy required to crush the EMAS material.

In the past, the DOT proposed and then scrapped plans to extend the main runway toward the west and to reroute the Snake River. The department now proposes to realign the Snake River around an embankment and the EMAS bed at the west end of the runway.

KNEEL JUMP-Apaay Campbell from Gambell flies to a repeat State Championship in the Kneel Jump.

BSSD soars to 4th place in the State at NYO games

By Jeffrey Erickson

In indigenous games "greatness" is measured in fractions of an inch. An athlete's ability to go just a little bit further when faced with competition and adversity elevates them. The ability to push through pain and exhaustion to go one more step or to make one last pull determines champions. All of these were in evidence shattered as young athletes continued to better the marks of their predecessors. Bodies were pushed to the limits with bloody palms and knuckles bandaged and ice packs were placed on bruises and aches. The Bering Strait School District jumped to the forefront with a remarkable leap by tiny dynamo, Apaay Campbell from Gambell. She successfully defended her state title by easily outdistancing her competitors. An amazing performance by Aniak's Raven Phillips in the Toe Kick eclipsed an outstanding effort by Unalakleet's Jonisha Wilson who leapt to a personal best and a 4th place fin-

NOTICE OF AVAILABILITY OF DRAFT ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT Nome Airport Safety Area Improvements (Project No 61413)

The Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities (DOT&PF), in cooperation with the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), announces the availability of the Draft Environmental Assessment (EA) and the opportunity to comment or request a public hearing (please include the reason for the request) on the proposed Nome Airport Runway Safety Area (RSA) Improvements Project.

Nome Airport (OME) is located northwest of downtown Nome, on the south coast of the Seward Peninsula. The purpose of the Improvements project is to enhance safety at the Nome Airport by bringing the RSA into compliance with FAA standards to the maximum extent practicable based on available funding. An RSA enhances safety for airplanes that undershoot overrun, or veer off the runway. Elements of the proposed project include:

- Improvements to both the main and crosswind runways to address RSA deficiencies
- Realignment of the Snake River around the proposed RSA embankment west of the main runway
- · Construction of drainage improvements to the east of the crosswind runway and northeast of the main runway that would affect Center Creek Development of a stockpile area and improvement of an access road for excavated material generated from the various
- project components
- Property acquisition

This EA is being prepared in accordance with the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), in compliance with Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act, Section 7 of the Endangered Species Act, Section 10 of the Rivers and Harbors Act, Section 404 of the Clean Water Act, Executive Order (E.O.) 11988 Floodplain Management, E.O. 11990 Protection of Wetlands, E.O. 11593 Protection and Enhancement of the Cultural Environment and E.O. 12898 Environmental Justice.

The Draft EA is available electronically at http://www.uskh.com/nome/index.htm

Paper copies are available for viewing or reproduction at the Nome City Offices at 102 Division Street and the Kegoayah Kozga Library at 223 Front Street, Nome.

If you have questions or comments regarding this project, please contact:

R.J. Stumpf, P.E., 2301 Peger Road, Fairbanks, AK 99709

Phone: (907) 451-2285, Fax: (907) 451-5126, Email: rj.stumpf@alaska.gov

To correspond by text telephone (TDD), call (907) 451-2363

You are invited to a public meeting -Wednesday, May 16, 2012

Please join DOT&PF and FAA to discuss the project and provide comments about the Draft EA. The meeting will be held from 4:30 PM to 6:30 PM with a presentation at 5:30 PM at the Mini Convention Center at 409 River Street, Nome, AK.

Note: The deadline for comments is May 31, 2012.

Port panel sets rules for harbor use

By Sandra L. Medearis

The bad news is that there will be a port charge this season for tying up craft on the banks of the Snake River where it used to be free, but the good news is that the fee will be only half what it costs to dock in the harbor. There will be no charge for subsistence fishers and hunters to put boats in and out of the water.

The reduction is to make the river moorage more attractive to owners of dredges with a draft of less than 30 inches in order to make room for operators of larger craft in the main harbor. The Port of Nome Commission adopted this rule and several others May 4 following a work session discussion during which the panel, interested gold miners and Harbormaster Joy Baker sorted out summer port use plans to best stretch the port to accommodate an increased number of uses with the onset of offshore dredge mining sea-

Permit fees: Why pan our pockets, miners ask

By Sandra L. Medearis

Miners had a beef with proposed offshore mining permits when the Nome Planning Commission met May 1 to go over the two ordinances pertaining to recreational mining on West Beach and East Beach waters and commercial mining operations. The issues came to the planning commission for a hashing over from the Nome Common Council. The City wants to have some control and knowledge of gold seekers with state permits to mine within Nome's city limits. They want permitting fees to recover anticipated costs associated with emergency services and law enforcement.

The recreational permit, as proposed, would cost $500 for the season. The proposed commercial permit, required for miners recovering more than 500 ounces of gold, showed a fee of $10,000. That got people hot, until they learned that $10,000 was an error, that the fee had been proposed to be $1,500.

Planning panel chair Tom Sparks emphasized that the commission, an appointed advisory group, had no legal power to tailor the permits themselves, but had the power to air them with the public and to advise

They don't necessarily want commercial fishermen to pay for permits, but they don't think the City should mine the miners' pockets as a special revenue source, some said.

The City was trying to turn away miners and mining tourism, a boon to the economy, some said.

"I see this as a big shot in the arm for the economy up here. It's like the City is trying to chase it off or strangle the golden goose," miner Cliff McHenry said. "Frankly, a lot of us are year around citizens and we are asking them to pay again or something we are already taxed for."

McHenry favors a summer season sales tax higher than the current 5 percent year around rate to help the City pay for summer activities and

Tobacco Free Summit hopes to clear Alaska's air

By Diana Haecker

About 85 people from all across Alaska and a few experts from the Lower 48 met in Nome last week for the 6th annual Alaska Tobacco Summit. The Alaska Tobacco Control Alliance selected Nome as the venue of their annual meeting because Nome just recently passed a city ordinance banning smoking in all public places.

"The ATCA summit is held every year in a different city, but to celebrate Nome's accomplishment of going smoke free, it's taking place here this week," said ATCA chair Danielle Sylvester of Nome. The goal was to bring tobacco control professionals to Nome for a threeday conference to educate, learn and share the messages of tobacco control strategies. "We brought in national speakers to bring their expertise from the Lower 48 and to get a fully-rounded view of where we are, where we go and what we do

Hello out there,

Because I tend to get hurt every few years and the lack of jobs within our communities I have, over the years, used up my 60 months of State Aid for single parents. So what am I to do now? How are people like me supposed to pay the bills and get the things that my kids and I need? Especially with the cost of everything going up all the time.

So where are these so called jobs that we are all supposed to find? Didn't the Government say they were going to create some? Instead you hear about jobs shutting down and more people out of work.

Not only that, but they are sending our troops to wars that they don't need to be sent to. Which causes heartache to people and having to pay more to hospitals-either in medical bills or having to talk to counselors.

They talk about sending money/food/medical aid to other How about the countries. money/food/medical aid that a lot of Americans need? You certainly don't see much of that.

Instead you see more immigrants let into our country. Hell, some of them are even given money to help them out. How do you think there got to be so many of them owning businesses? How about giving us some of that money so we could afford things too. Lord knows I would like to be able to afford to do more things.

At least I know that because I have faith in God that he will provide for me and my family and allow me to keep helping people if I could. Although my dad and grandparents are no longer around. I wish to thank my parents and grandparents for the many things they have taught me. Along with all the many people who I got the chance to meet and listen to—thank you all!

The other problem I have with the Government is back in 2008 on my Income Tax they added an extra $467. I did not ask for that, I even called and asked them if they did not make a mistake on it, apparently not they said. Since then they did decide it was a mistake and said I had to pay it back-plus interest-so they took

Please, pretty please, dress accordingly for the weather, even though it might be spring it still gets pretty cold in the evenings, so please be prepared for anything. Remember, if you go hunting make sure you are aiming at ducks instead of hu-

Take care you all. As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Dear Editor,

What a delight Lemonade Day was in Nome! I am sure that the purpose was to introduce children to the concept of having a business of their own. They all did such a great job advertising and presenting their products. As I drove from stand to stand I realized that there was something greater taking place! At each stand there was evidence that families were working together: moms and dads, brothers and sisters, even grandparents helping the little ones take care of customers, serve their lemonade and count out change. I there are more activities planned in Nome that will foster families working together. Thank you to all those who planned and supported this effort! Rhonda Schneider Nome, AK

Dear Editor and good citizens of In1994 I had the pleasure of panning for gold in Nome for four days. Previously I had dredged on the 40 Mile River by Chicken, Alaska for 14 years. That trip to Nome I panned 40 grains of gold and to this day I still have and treasure it. Nome has a unique history and I felt part of it. Now it's come to my attention that the City Council of Nome wants to charge for a mining permit to pan or dredge in the City's jurisdiction. This permit I too would treasure -one that has a picture of me standing by the Three Swedes stating, "Clyde Miles permitted to mine gold on the beaches and ocean in Nome Alaska." AND if this permit costs under $50 I would obtain it upon arriving on the 22 of May. But it appears that some in the City Council are seeing dollar signs and trying to come up with a permit that would not be an appropriate amount. This is a first time charge and what we want as lawabiding citizens is compliance with our just cause.

A cost of $500 for a beach mining permit and $1,500 for a dredge permit would be many times over a just amount. This action by some on the City Council would inspire me to go door to door in Nome on a recall of any member who feels this is a fair amount. I have dredged in Nome for three years now and last year gave over $3,000 personally to landlords for rent, bought a few thousand dollars in food at the local markets, spent money in the rec center working out, paid for a number of shows at the theater, bought a lot of good meals at different restaurants, paid for supplies at the local hardware

Yes, the miners who come to Nome spend a lot of money in the local economy and what they don't need is an unjust tax. Remember, Nome has a great history and what you do as Councilmen will be part of that history for all to judge 100 years from now. Do the right thing -put out regulation that the common man sees as just and one with which they will willingly comply.

Thank you. Sincerely, Clyde Harold Miles Morenci, AZ

Critical Thinkers

With this year's high school and college graduates entering the work force we hope they have taken the opportunity to register to vote and become contributing members of our community. The State of Alaska, the federal government and the City of Nome have invested heavily in the education of these young citizens. We hope they know how to think logically, form their own educated opinions and see through the layers of horse pucky certain political and governmental agencies shovel our

Isn't it amazing how some campaign strategists will not hesitate to tie the truth into knots? Isn't it amazing how they play on voter ignorance and isn't it even more amazing how some voters really are so stupid? We really have to have a sense of humor. One right wing religious conservative group blames this nation's problems on the devil because he is the one who put the numbers in the Periodic Table of the Elements. (Guess they flunked jr. high science.) Our nation needs informed voters. We can't just sit quietly and let the political strategists pull their specially spun wool over our eyes.

We need the bright shiny faces of the Class of 2012 and their youthful enthusiasm to keep Nome and western Alaska moving forward. We need to face the social, economic and environmental challenges of the Arctic with informed action and come up with open-minded solutions that involve all of us. -N.L.M.-

Nome Police arrest man for shooting handgun

By Diana Haecker

A man was arrested by Nome police officers after having fired a single shot with a handgun in the early morning hours of Sunday, May 6. According to court documents, Floyd Anderson, 34, fired a .44 Magnum handgun loaded with one bullet to scare off a group of people who had allegedly pursued him to his NPD officers responded to the report of a weapon having been fired near 119 W First Avenue shortly after 3 a.m. on Sunday morning.

According to their investigation, Anderson had been at the Board of Trade Saloon prior to the incident. According to the police complaint, Anderson was challenged to fight and when he refused, a female walked up to him and slapped him in the face.

The police complaint said that Anderson left the bar and was chased by several people who threatened to beat him up. Once at home, the complaint says, Anderson went inside, took his handgun and loaded it with one bullet.

The complaint says he was pulled outside and discharged the firearm toward the ground with the intent to scare everyone.

Anderson was arrested and charged with one count of misconduct involving a weapon in the fourth degree. The charge stems from Anderson having fired a weapon while being intoxicated.

NPD Chief John Papasodora said that the investigation continues, but as of Monday, no charges have been filed against other parties to the incident.

Police still look for Nome-Beltz and NACTEC burglars

By Diana Haecker

Nome Police are still looking for suspects involved with stealing two projectors and at least eight laptop computers from the Nome-Beltz High School and the NACTEC building.

Nome Public Schools Superintendent Mike Brawner said that a report reached him on a Sunday, April 14, that something seemed wrong. "Our maintenance crew came in during that weekend to check on the building and they noticed that things looked out of place," Brawner said. When teachers came back to work on Monday, they noticed the missing equipment: at least two NEC projectors and eight Apple laptops were removed from different classrooms.

Brawner said the projectors were taken from classrooms and the computers were stolen from the NACTEC building. Brawner said it was visible that the outside and inside doors had been forced open. The damage to the doors was minimal, but the loss of the equipment is pegged at $10,000 at least.

Chief John Papasodora said NPD officers are still investigating and are asking the public for any information related to the break-ins. The school district is also offering a $100 reward for information leading to the recovery of the stolen items.

DOT still clears area roads

The Dept. of Transportation continues to plow open the area's roads and as of Monday, issued this report. The DOT has opened the Nome-Taylor Highway up to mile 40.

The Nome-Teller Highway is open to mile 45 from the Nome side, and to mile 53 from the Teller side. The DOT warns that there are still soft spots, ruts and potholes in the roads.

The Nome-Council Highway is still closed beyond mile 21.5 and construction crews are working at mile 16. The DOT asks to use caution around construction crews and equipment.

of their mining permits, in order, on their mining vessels:

- Each number must be at least 16 inches high and at least 10 inches
- The numbers must at all times face the beach while miners are dredging. • The numbers must have a bright contrast and be easily visible from
- Black numbering on a white background is preferable.
- Failure to display these numbers at all times is grounds for having a permit cancelled.

In other business, the commission learned that the vessel known as the Rustler, owned by Mike Benchoff, was not abandoned or derelict under Nome Code of Ordinances.

"However, the evidence clearly shows that the vessel and its owner, Mr. Mike Benchoff, have repeatedly violated the Port of Nome Tariff," so goes the Record of Decision presented at the meeting. "The port director therefore must impose conditions to protect the port and its users from the hazards the vessel imposes," and sets a June 15 deadline for the conditions to be satisfied.

If the conditions are not satisfied, Benchoff and his vessels will be barred from port use and criminal trespass charges filed.

These conditions include removal of the Rustler 14 days of the vessel being free of ice, after which the vessel cannot enter port waters without an inspection. If inspection permits the vessel to return to the water, the Rustler must have an operable engine installed within 14 calendar days of the boat entering the water. Having satisfied these demands, the Rustler will be able to resume use of the port on probationary status.

But that is not all. The City wants Benchoff's property and another boat, the 99ϕ Romance off port property by June 1. The area around the Rustler must be boomed to prevent environmental damage from the frozen oily mix in and around the vessel. The USCG and the ADEC will have eyes on Benchoff, according to the document. The City and Benchoff have had issues centering on pollution from the boat, payment of bills and refusing to obey orders of the port staff.

Failure to comply with the demands or violations of the tariff will result in impound and removal of the Rustler at Benchoff's expense and will cause Benchoff to lose port privileges.

Finally, three newly appointed port commissioners took the oath of office May 4: Iura Leahu, Randy Romenesko and Mike Sloan. Romenesko also serves on the Nome Planning Commission.

in the future," Sylvester said.

One lofty goal is to make Alaska smoke free. "That's a huge goal," Sylvester admitted. And here is where a barrage of statistics comes in to support the idea that tobacco is taking a toll on Alaska's society. According to the Alaska Dept. of Health and Social Services' tobacco prevention and control program, more Alaskans die annually from the direct effects of tobacco use than from suicide, motor vehicle crashes, chronic liver disease and cirrhosis, homicide and HIV/AIDS combined. In 2010, tobacco use cost Alaska an estimated $348 million in direct medical expenditures and an additional $231 million in lost productivity due to tobacco-related deaths. This adds up to a total of $579 million, not counting lost productivity from tobacco-related illness and costs due to secondhand smoke exposure-related illness or death.

There are about 106,000 smokers in Alaska. By region, the North, Northwest and the Interior of Alaska constitute the areas with the most percentage of smokers, where 39 percent of all adults smoke. The least amount of smokers live at the Gulf coast and only 17 percent of adults smoke in Anchorage. About 47,000 children are exposed to second hand smoke in their homes. However, in order to battle tobacco in all its forms, the State of Alaska is the number one state in the nation when it comes to funding tobacco prevention programs. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommends that Alaska spend $10.7 million a year to have an effective, comprehensive tobacco prevention program and the state actually allocates $10.8 million a year for tobacco prevention and cessation.

Several Alaskan communities have adopted smoke-free ordinances and Nome is leading by example. "Nome has the strongest clean indoor air ordinance on the books in the entire state," said Sylvester. But the tobacco-prevention professionals still have their work cut out for them. An estimated 6,500 high school students smoke in Alaska. Every year, the tobacco industry succeeds in convincing 1,000 kids in Alaska under 18 to start smoking or using tobacco

Sylvester said that the tobacco industry constantly invents new products marketed to youth. "The industry is not going away in marketing the products that cause cancer, but they mask it very well in their advertising," Sylvester said. For example, the tobacco industry's reaction to increasing smokeless laws are nicotine products like chews, or dissolvable candy-like lozenges that contain nicotine. "The industry actually make products that help people quit smoking but those products don't help at all because the nicotine content is stronger and people may get off cigarettes, but they get hooked on chew or orbs, which are a sometimes harder addiction to overcome," Sylvester said.

Joie Brown, community development manager at RuralCAP in Anchorage said that the organization is involved in tobacco prevention because "It's killing our people in the rural areas and we need to address it." RuralCAP has partnered with the Alaska Native Health Consortium and runs a tobacco prevention program that targets Headstart. "We focus on the kids' health and help their parents with tobacco cessation," Brown said. A former Nomeite, Amy (Flaherty) Gorn (formerly KNOM volunteer) is a community wellness coordinator in Sitka with RuralCAP and she works with a youth advocacy group. "A lot of people start when they are young and peer pressure leads to using tobacco," Brown said. "It starts in social use and then they become addicted and really don't know how to quit. Or they tried and are unsuccessful or they don't have the support or tools to quit." Discussions at the summit centered on how to get the message across that help is available.

"This is a grass roots movement," said Danielle Sylvester. "It's not about taking away anybody's rights and it's not about telling people whether or not they should or shouldn't use tobacco. It's about local coalitions who work together to promote health in their community and saying that this is an issue of our community's health and we're going to stand up for it," Sylvester said.

Nomeite Crystal Tobuk sat in the audience, soaking up the information because promoting healthy lifestyles is her business. Tobuk is a professional fitness trainer, a mom and an ex-smoker. As a personal trainer, she started her business recently to guide people to achieve their personal fitness goals and one aspect is to quit smoking.

She also knows from personal experience that it's a mighty hard thing to kick the habit. "I grew up in Nome and used to smoke," Tobuk said. "I started at a very young age at 12 and quit when I was 20." She said that setting an example for young kids is crucial for a smokefree life. "A lot of that has to do with what we perceive as normal when we grow up. We have to try to change those norms and try to help people understand that even if you are an adult and it's legal for you to smoke, you are setting standards for our children and they think that it's OK to smoke when they're 18 or 19," Tobuk said.

Gustavo Torrez from California is an expert at fighting against tobacco industry's targeting youth. Torrez guided the audience through a presentation on how to effectively use social media for networking with other tobacco prevention pros around the country and getting the message to youth. Janet Porter is with an organization called Break Free Alliance, one of six funded by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, and her mission is to reduce the use of tobacco in low-income populations. "It's a social justice issue," Porter said. And as such she proposed to influence policy to protect people that are shown to be the heaviest users: 95 percent of jail inmates smoke, so do most mental health patients, people in homeless shelters and low income neighborhoods.

What's next for the region? Danielle Sylvester said that she is working on strengthening tribal resolutions that call for smoke-free ordinances in the villages. "If a community is not smoke-free but wants to be, or would like their bingo hall or a tribal offices to be smoke free, you can join the Alaska Tobacco Control Alliance and you'll have lots of support from all of Alaska," Sylvester said. In addition, she works on strengthening the support in local governments and to continue to support cessation and prevention programs as well as educating people on what the tobacco industry is up to.

In Nome, the Nome Community Center and the Norton Sound Health Corporation's CAMP department offer resources to quit smoking and to become involved in smoke-free campaigns.

stay off the property tax mill rate, for instance.

Commissioner Charlie Weiss agreed. He didn't want to stifle tourism's boost to local economy. "I don't want to see us stop that. I think a $500 fee will ..."

The City was chilling passionate dreams for which gold seekers were willing to pay—and risk—big bucks, miner Chick Trainor told planners. He had seen miners lose their investment to weather, for example.

"I think you are singling out people that are just living a dream here, and possibly making a profit or not making a profit, and you are penalizing them," Trainor said. "These people invested their last bucks in this dream to come up here for the summer and dredge. Some of them will make it, some of them won't. They sometimes sit on the beach in stormy weather and can't go anywhere and lose it all."

He saw a family who invested $30,000 just sit on the beach in stormy weather last year, Trainor said. "They didn't seem unhappy about it, the fact that they were locked in their tent. They probably took a big beating, but they did it. It was their own initiative and their own investment," he said. "They should be rewarded, not punished at every turn."

Miners already pay enough, according to miner Steve Pomrenke. He paid $6,000 in Port of Nome docking fees. He paid 5 percent on every gallon of fuel. He paid 5 percent on parts for his equipment. He paid a mining license tax to State of Alaska ad royalties to the state.

He could see taxing recreational dredgers who are not paying royalties to anyone. He has to pay 20 percent to "the guy who owns the lease." There's lots of money to be made, "but what you have left when the job is done, that's the point," Pomrenke said.

"The city is getting their fair share," Pomrenke declared. Take summer construction. "They get a nickel off every dollar they make."

The proposed permits require the miners to keep precise records and allow the City of Nome personnel to examine the books.

Trainor voted no on that.

The feds could look in his books, Trainor said, and see how much he owed, but "I don't want you people looking through my books. I don't want it. I don't like the advancing arms of the government into [everything] I do," he said.

Commission members seemed lukewarm to the permit proposals as currently presented. Some voiced reservations.

Commissioner Randy Romenesko said he thought City resources would be better expended collecting existing sales taxes and licensing fees. Without that effort, he had a hard time buying into the permit plan, he said.

"There is plenty of regulating and ability there to make money off commercial transactions that everyone can make a little money along the trail," Romenesko said.

The Nome Planning Commission tabled the two ordinances until their meeting May 31.

Sparks reiterated the advisory nature of the Nome Planning Commission

"We are deliberate about what we do. We take our timeWe are appointed by the City Council. When they send something down to us, they want us to work with it," Sparks said. "I think this is a good start to engage you guys out there."

The City's attorney, Brooks Chandler, has acknowledged there might be limits to how far a local government could go regarding permitting conditions, but the City has authority to require a permit for mining within city limits. The City of Nome owns surface rights 1.63 miles out from shore.

According to DNR, 60 new permits so far this season added to 30 permits last year, makes a potential for 90 different mining operations off Nome beaches. According to the DNR Web site, permit applications close at the end of the month with no guarantee of permits granted after the May 31 deadline.

Junkman gives trash a joyous note

World-renown percussionist/composer Donald Knaack (aka, The Junkman) has been in residence in the Unalakleet School working with all the grades from pre-K through 12, using recycled materials as instruments of music. Friday May 4 The Junkman and all the students presented a Junkjam, a gala concert, for the community free of charge at the school. As the Junkman has never been to Alaska before this residency, Friday evening's event is a "never before in Alaska" event! And it's not to be missed.

Sponsored by the Native Village of Unalakleet with an IGAP grant from the Environmental Protection Agency, and travel by Alaska Airlines, the focus is on music and the environment. Recycled materials are used for all the musical instruments, and each of the school's classes will make their own unique musical presentation with them. The Junkman also performed solo and the concert closed with a school and community Junkjam, where everyone joined in the music-making — no prior music experience was necessary to have a great time making music!

The Junkman says: "I use recycled materials because they give me unlimited original sounds that make my music sound like no other composer—because we are not using the same sounds. And, I am also reusing objects as opposed to buying instruments, which has a huge positive environmental impact!" Middy Johnson, General Manager of the Native Village of Unalakleet stated, "We are very happy that NVU was able to provide this type of enrichment for our youth, and hope that in the future, we will be in a position to share these types of programs with other Norton Sound Communities. A special thank you to our funders for making this possible."

While in Unalakleet, The Junkman also presented his HOP (Help Our

A musk ox culture in the making: Mekoryuk musk ox hunters and knitters visit Nome for cultural exchange

By Diana Haecker

Peoples and their cultures have always been defined by the animals they hunt and whose parts give meat, clothing and shelter. In modern times, this seems obsolete as meat seems to grow in feedlots and is neatly packaged in grocery stores for the modern hunter to take home. However, there are pockets of subsistence cultures in the world. One being rural Alaska, having maintained that identity, and even reclaimed a long lost tradition.

Take musk oxen for example. Hunted to extinction in the mid 1800s in Alaska, the tradition, the culture, the knowledge died with the last animal. With the re-introduction of the musk ox to the state, a new culture of the musk ox is reborn and contemporary hunters are shaping it.

This was evidenced during a oneday workshop held at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus in Nome. Assistant professor of biology Claudia Ihl organized a cultural exchange between hunters, spinners and knitters from Mekoryuk on Nunivak Island to share their musk ox knowledge with Nomeites, who increasingly begin to discover the value of the animals' meat and the priceless warmth of a garment made of qiviut, the musk ox under

"We brought together hunters and knitters from our area and eight people from Nunivak Island for a cultural exchange on how to use musk oxen," said Ihl. With musk oxen being brought back in the 1990s to the Seward Peninsula, the growing musk ox populations allowed for

"Tradition is what works," Ihl said. "People do what works and they do it as long as it works and then they call it tradition. So we're now developing new traditions on how to hunt musk ox and I thought this cultural exchange would be a cool way to learn from people who are part of the new tradition, who have 20 more years of experience and to forge them."

The conference room at NW Campus was packed with people listening to informal presentations while hand spinning yarn or knitting intricate qiviut headbands. Samuel Smith from Mekoryuk is a carver and showed different parts of male horns, head boss and female horns that he uses to carve earrings. The difference between male and female horns, he said, is in the color. Female horns are very clear and shiny, with various colorations.

Lemonade Day: Kids put the squeeze on the stand

Story and photos by Diana Haecker

In most climates the beginning of May is a good time to set up a lemonade stand and quench the thirst of passers-by. Lemonade Day in Nome was at 30°F —a bit colder than in the rest of the nation. The sun sparkled from a clear blue sky with shore fast ice still in place, while a cold wind straight out of Siberia cooled things off even more

But hey, if life gives you lemons, make lemonade. This is what at least 70 kids in Nome did. They made lemonade and all kinds of other delicacies, put on their parkies, hats and gloves and set up shop in at least 44 locations throughout Nome and Icy View. They participated in style in Lemonade Day and got people out cruising the town, spending their money on lemonade, hot and cold beverages as well as a wide assortment of baked goods.

Every single stand was made with imagination and lots of hard work.

The stand of Lola Konkey and her friends Naomi and Ashleigh boasted home-baked lollipops with bird and frog faces.

Moms and daughters spent hours baking. Dads showed off their carpentry skills and built real storefront stands painted in bright yellow, such

Teacher Appreciation

It was a teacher who taught me that one plus one equals two and a teacher who taught me that energy is equal to mass multiplied by the squared speed of light. It was a teacher who taught me about onomatopoeia and that if I stopped in the woods at the convergence of two roads, I would be wise to take the path less traveled. It was a teacher who taught me about the rain in the clouds and the salt in the ocean and that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. We hold these truths to be self evident. It was a teacher.

That teacher didn't have any standards or standardized tests by which to measure value. All that teacher had was his or her love and a deep rooted belief that on any given day I would wake up and learn, even on the days when I tested both her patience and her faith. Looking back, I realize now that of all the things that teacher taught me the most important was how to pick fair teams in a game of kick ball. That teacher taught me how to be a human being, how to be comfortable in my own skin, and how to have compassion for my fellow human beings. How did she do it all, with no standards? Amazing.

The job of the teacher is frightening not because of the work but because of the power a teacher has over the life of a child. Your actions, your words, your nuances can make a child's day miserable or joyous. Often, you will be oblivious because you too are only human and it is a long day of hard work teaching when the job is done well. On this Teacher Appreciation Day, it is my wish that you go gentle into that good night but with determination and confidence that you are making a difference. When you teach, I hope you believe that you teach forever in the minds and the hearts of children.

Thank You! Rob Picou

as Harmony Martinson's stand. Others attached balloons and other colorful decorations to their stands. Jillian' Iyatunguk gave her "business" a real name: "Jillian's Delight." Her goal was to make some money that she wanted to put toward new glasses and new paint for her room.

In Icy View, kids had a slightly higher price structure in place, but their stands were making money for a good cause. Raina McRae sold her lemonade for a buck with the goal to turn over the profits to the Nome Children Home.

Lupe and Dorothy Callahan spent the afternoon selling lemonade and raspberry-ade to donate their earnings to the Nome Animal Shelter. They also gave a price break to those who brought their own cups.

The hands-down coldest spot was across the street from Subway. Amber Gray and Tristan Merchant braved the cold wind channeling through the buildings and didn't leave until selling the last drop of lemonade.

Nomeites turned out in good numbers and supported the kids selling their goods. A Lemonade Bus toured all stands and Al Burgo chauffeured Mr. Lemonhead from stand to stand, buying a little something from everybody.

The idea behind the program is to foster the entrepreneurial spirit in youth.

The program started in 2007 in Houston, Texas and expanded into a nationwide event. In Alaska the event was held in Anchorage, Barrow, Kenai, Soldotna, Fairbanks, the Mat-Su and Southeast communities.

Thanks to your mom

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Unless you spend your time surfing biology websites, you likely have not seen the scientifically touching Mother's Day tribute by Adam Cole called, "A Biologists Mother's Day Song.'

Adam Cole, a Stanford biology graduate who now works for National Public Radio at the science desk in Washington, D.C., wrote the tribute last year to his mother in Oregon.

In the song, Cole honors his mom stating, "Slightly more than half of everything I am is thanks to you."

While the claim may seem strange, it turns out Cole is right. From a biological standpoint, over half of who we are comes from our mothers. Here is why.

At conception, a father's sperm contributes only DNA. mother's egg, on the other hand, contributes more than just DNA. The egg contains mitochondria, small molecular batteries that power every cell in the human body. These mitochondria have their own DNA. They divide and distribute themselves into every human cell. This means that every mitochondrion in your body is descended from your mother. None came from

Furthermore, your mother provided nutrition during the critical first weeks of your fetal development. It was her hormonal signals that ensured DOCTOR your brain, heart, and body formed appropriately. She even shared her antibodies with you.

This is why you did not have to fight off new viruses during the first weeks after birth.

Her influence over your life extends well beyond birth. Now matter how old you are, your mom is still influencing daily decisions made at the molecular level in your

Though your DNA comes from both mom and dad, you do not use all the genes available in your DNA. If DNA were like a book of all the possible versions of you that can exist, your genes would be the chapters in that book. Scientists are finding that that your mom may exert the greater influence over the genes, or chapters, on your DNA that are actually read. Will you be tall or short? Will you have a full head of hair or be bald? Will your cholesterol level be high or low? Will you struggle with your body weight? Will you have a healthy heart? It turns out the answer is largely determined by the influence of your mom's hormones during pregnancy.

In fact a new field of research, called epigenetics, has developed in response to the discovery that outside forces influence a person's genes. Epigenetics goes beyond genetics, which merely looks at how DNA is inherited, to the deeper questions about why some people, even with similar DNA, are more susceptible to addiction, depression, cardiovascular disease, or diabetes.

The research in epigenetics is still new, but we are learning that a mother's health during pregnancy will influence the health of several generations of her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren.

A pregnant mother who is found to have pre-diabetes will have children and grandchildren with an increased risk of true diabetes.

Increased stress hormones in a mother are associated with anxiety and depression in her adult children.

Obesity and elevated blood fats in a pregnant female are known to increase the chances of finding obesity, elevated blood fats, and insulin resistance (the first stages of cardiovascular disease) in her children as early as age six.

The opposite is also true, and this is good news. With each generation, new moms have an opportunity to change the genetic destiny of their children and grandchildren by making healthy choices. These choices can be as simple as eating a nutritious diet, staying physically active, stopping smoking, avoiding alcohol, and maintaining a healthy weight. These healthy decisions cause positive genes to be expressed starting at the moment of conception and persisting through life.

This weekend we celebrate Mother's Day. If you have an opportunity, tell the special mother in your life how you are thankful for the role she played, and still plays, in bringing out the best in your

FAA fines Alaska Airlines and sister airline Horizon

By Diana Haecker

The Federal Aviation Administration levied a $210,000 fine against Alaska Airlines for failing to properly document and tag deactivated systems and equipment before making repairs. According to the FAA, Alaska Air maintenance workers did not document "alternative" deactivation procedures and didn't install danger tags when they should've. This, according to FAA, took place during maintenance on six of the Boing 737 airplanes on 10 occasions between June 19, 2010 and January 13, 2011.

Alaska Airlines spokeswoman Bobbie Egan said that Alaska Airlines technicians did not properly document when they used an approved alternate procedure when replacing a landing light. In an email correspondence, Egan wrote that these procedures are used during ground maintenance and were performed 10 times on six airplanes. "In these instances, Alaska performed the required maintenance work according to the aircraft manufacturer's specifications; however, we did not properly document the alternate procedure," Egan wrote. "The maintenance was performed during ground operational checks and at no time were passengers or employees in danger.'

Egan said that since receiving the FAA notice, Alaska Airlines has implemented a number of changes to ensure compliance, including revising the maintenance manual, implementing a new training program for aircraft technicians and performing routine compliance audits. Alaska is working cooperatively with the FAA to resolve the proposed penalty,

Alaska Airlines' sister airline Horizon Air was also slapped with a $445,125 civil penalty for allegedly operating a Bombardier Dash-8-400 aircraft on 45 flights when it was not in compliance with Federal Aviation Regulations. The FAA alleges Horizon failed to comply with an airworthiness directive that required the airline to inspect for cracked or corroded engine nacelle fittings on its Dash-8-400 aircraft. The directive, with an effective date of March 17. 2011, ordered inspections of the nacelles every 300 operating hours, and repairs as needed. Between March 17 and 23, 2011, Horizon operated the aircraft on at least 45 revenue passenger flights when it had accumulated more than 300 hours of flight time since its last inspection.

Obituary

In Memoriam Charles "Tumungnaq" Johnson

Charles "Tumungnaq" Johnson, known as Charlie by many, was born in White Mountain, December 9, 1939 to Frank and Marcella Johnson. His family moved to Nome in 1944. His father Frank took a job with the CAA (now the FAA) and moved his family to Woody Island. He graduated from Kodiak High School in 1958. He attended Washington State University from 1961-64, to study mathematics. He took a year off and went to Europe with three friends for what he described as "some of the best education I've ever received." When he returned, he received his Degree in Business Administration and Mathematics from the University of Oregon.

In 1968, while working in marketing, he met his wife Brenda of 43 years, on a business trip to Illinois. He told his friends "she was the most beautiful woman he had ever seen." Soon after, they were married and Brenda moved with him to Portland, OR.

In 1976 He moved his wife and two children home to Nome and became the Executive Director of Kawerak Inc. After three years, He brought Kawerak out of bankruptcy. In 1979 He was elected to Bering Straits Native Corporation, as a member of the board of directors. In 1981 he became the president of BSNC. During his five year tenure as president, he was instrumental in turning a company around that was deeply in debt. He remained on the BSNC board of directors through 2006.

In 1978, He was instrumental in forming the Eskimo Walrus Commission and in 1994 he established the Alaska Nanuuq Commission, serving as executive director until his death.

He was appointed by the first President Bush as a Presidential Advisor to the US Arctic Research Commission, sat on the Oversight Counsel for the International Arctic Research Center, and was a member of the Scientific Review Group for the National Marine Fisheries Service. He served for many years as vice chairman of the board for the Alaska National Bank and as a board member of the Iditarod Trail Committee. In 1984-85, he became the first two-term chairman of the Alaska Federation of Natives. He was also the vice president of the Inuit Circumpolar Conference (representing Alaska), and served on the US delegation to the Arctic Council and to the Organization of American States. At the time of his passing, he was chairman of the board of White Mountain Native Corporation, serving on the board sincethe early 1980s. He was also the co-chair representing the U.S. on the Bi-Lateral Commission for the Conservation of Chukchi Polar Bears.

Charlie dedicated much of his life to ensuring that others would be able to continue to practice a subsistence lifestyle (as he did). He combined this passion with empowering disadvantaged groups through his vision and political influence that spanned nine presidents and across many international boundaries. He was a compassionate man and although he often was at odds with others they left the table with workable solutions. His constant words of advice were, "Always let people leave with their dignity." His wisdom and charisma, paired with his genuine humility, established a foundation that many others who hope to create real and positive changes can follow.

Charlie was a loving father and was happiest and most proud when he was surrounded by his children and grandchildren. Not a day would pass without a story about them, with a huge smile on his face. He cherished every moment he spent with them, especially at fish camp, upriver from White Mountain. With the unconditional love and support of his wife, he taught his children to be proud of who they are and the importance of preserving and respecting their cultural heritage and the subsistence way of life.

Charlie was preceded in death by his son Truman, He leaves behind Brenda, his wife of 43 years, daughter Nicole Johnston and her children, Drew and Adrianna and son Frank (Boogles) and Allison Johnson and their children, Teague, Alohna, Melody, Alyssa, and Davin. He will be missed dearly by his brother, sisters, and extended family. There will be a Potluck Celebration on Saturday, May 12, at 2 p.m. at the Nome Recreation Center. Please bring your favorite dish and story to share.

GAINS in the Bering Strait

Alaska's dropout rate is double the US average.

One project that is trying to make a difference is a consortium of efforts between Kawerak, Inc. (an Alaska Native regional nonprofit organization), the Alaska Staff Development Network (ASDN) and the Bering Strait School District (BSSD). The Graduation and Academic Improvement for Native Students (GAINS) project is funded by a $1.5 million grant that will try to implement innovative academic interventions and dropout prevention strategies that result in all students graduating from high school. GAINS provides a full three years of services in five of BSSD's neediest and most isolated schools, which have some of the lowest graduation rates in Alaska and the U.S. Each subsequent year, an additional five schools will be served.

The GAINS project is developing four strategies to assist in dropout

1. Create a Dropout Early Warning Intervention System (DEWIS) in grades 1-12 that interfaces with BSSD's existing data system. DEWIS assists school staffs to identify students who are struggling in reading, mathematics, behavior or attendance. Research has shown that students who are struggling in at least two of the listed areas have a higher likelihood of dropping out of school. This tool will help the instructional staff at each school identify, early on the students who are struggling and then assist in the development of strategies to address the individual needs of the student.

2. Develop dropout prevention strategies for students based upon individual needs of students through each school's Response Team. This team meets weekly and uses a student's academic and behavioral data from DEWIS and then creates a dropout prevention plan for each identified student. Parents are included in the development of this plan. Other resources from the region are also explored.

There is a high teacher turnover rate in BSSD. The annual teacher turnover rate is around 35 percent. Consequently, in a three-year cycle, most schools have all new teachers, but the same high-need students remain. This results in many teachers each year with limited teaching experience and limited knowledge of the local Alaska Native culture, which adversely impacts student learning. The following strategies focus on creating stronger and skillful teachers who have a stronger appreciation of the rich Alaska Native

3. Building instructional capacity of district administrators, principals, teachers in explicit systemic instruction, language and literacy skills and Response to Intervention/Instruction (RTI) through professional develop-

And Mr. Knaack's message will endure well after he leaves. The two week residency has included the construction of a Junk Playstation, a sound sculpture located outside the school, available for all passers-by to pick up a stick and create a musical community on the spot with other interested persons.

Musk ox culture species and the colors they produce. The common rock lichen, black in color and found abundantly on the tundra, produces vibrant pinks and purple shades. A yellow lichen, called Hematoma lichen when first mixed with water and ammonia turns deep blue, but Persons assured that it only stays that color for one day and then turns into a brownish-purple shade

While dying with lichen produces colorfast shades in a natural way, the dye's fumes are an irritant to the lungs and should only be used outside or with the use of a venting hood.

Mikey Lean modeled a hand knit Norwegian-style cardigan completely made of qiviut that was dyed with lichens. Cheryl Cavota showed a red neck warmer. To get the color, she soaked the yarn in 26 bags of Earl Grey tea, scarlet dye and four packs of watermelon Kool-Aid. Who would've thought? Marie Tozier then held a presentation of how to dye yarn with Kool-Aid. It's fast, can be done in the microwave and is a colorfast, non-toxic dye. Sally Whitman and Viva Smith from Mekoryuk were impressed with the results Kool-Aid produced and couldn't wait to get back home to try it out.

The Golden Fleece

The treasure of a musk ox lies hidden underneath the shaggy guard hair. The fluffy underhair can be picked off the tundra as the animals shed, but combing the hair out of a hide yields more volume and is cleaner to spin.

Viva Smith, her face showing a deep hunter's tan, said she has no relatives who provide meat or hides for her, so she's going out herself to hunt for musk oxen, seals and birds. She cuts the meat, hangs parts of it to dry and then gets the hide to comb the qiviut out with a dog comb. She said she cuts the guard hair before taking the comb to the hide. "I bring the hide home, clip it, give it a haircut, shake it and I comb it out. It's easier when it's raw," Smith said. "I used to spin it, but now my grandkids get in the way and I have to wait until they sleep or take a nap to spin," she said. She knits sweaters, hats, smoke rings, headbands, gloves, even socks.

The knitted pieces of art and warmth produce a modest income for her when she sells them at craft fairs. "I take some when I go AFN or when I go to Fur Rondy, I sell my stuff, whenever I have chance to go, I take some and sell," she said.

Sally Whitman gets her hides from relatives and combs out the under wool and spent last winter spinning the wool into yarn.

Claudia Ihl said that there is still uncertainty among hunters in this region on how to use the hide and how to get the qiviut out. Ihl and a delegation of hunters and knitters from Nome, Elim, Shishmaref and Wales traveled to Mekoryuk a few weeks ago and there, Ihl said, they learned how to really get the qiviut out of a hide. "The Mekoryuk ladies showed us how to use a dog comb and a plain old dinner fork to get the qiviut out of the hide," Ihl said.

While it can be quite a task to get all the qiviut out, ladies in Mekoryuk cut the hide in strips and comb the hair out one strip at a time, which makes is less overwhelming, Ihl said. Guard hair is sometimes used for doll hair making and to stuff pillows, not the fluffy kind, but a rather solid variety.

During their trip to Mekoryuk, Ihl made an observation that indicates how deeply musk oxen have influenced the Nunivak Island culture. "One of the very first things you notice when you get off the plane in Mekoryuk is that everybody has a qivuit hat or scarf or smoke ring," said Ihl. "You really have to look hard to find a person who doesn't have some qiviut on them. Even the newborn babies have qiviut on them. It's definitely a musk ox culture. The meat, the hunting, the knitting, all of it," Ihl said.

While the ladies were talking about coloring yarns, the hunters gathered in a different room, discussing ways to prepare meat. Henry Ivanoff said that the young hunters really like to go out and get musk oxen and that they prefer cows because their meat is tender and less gamey tasting. But even for tough meat, they have a trick: soak it in soy sauce for a while and pressure-cook it.

When asked if the musk ox ever bothered townspeople in Mekoryuk, as Nome's musk ox have last year attacked several dogs, Ivanoff said that at first they did. In the 1930s when the first musk oxen were brought to the island, they were hanging around the village. "Dogs on the chain were killed," Ivanoff said. "Nowadays the musk ox are scared, they don't bother us. We hunt them, we eat them."

Ihl said that people hunted musk oxen thousands of years ago. "There are cave paintings that are 30,000 years old of musk ox. Hunters of the ice age period have hunted these animals," Ihl said. A cave in France features a painting of a musk ox, bearing witness to the long connection between man and the beast.

With the musk ox now having made a comeback and the interest generated by the workshop, Ihl hopes to take the idea of musk ox cultural exchanges beyond Nome and into the outlying communities.

The exchange was funded in part by a National Science Foundation program called "Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research" and more funding came from the National Park Service and Northwest Campus.

NAME YOUR NEW HOSPITAL
WIN $250

We need the help of our patient owners to select a name for the new hospital that will represent its importance to our community.

ENTER! IT'S EASY!

1. Be creative - come up with one name or 100!

Keep in mind the name should be:

- Connected to our regional Alaska Native traditions
- Grounded in our region's cultural and linguistic heritage
- Related to the well-being of Norton Sound region residents

2. Mail your ideas by June 15, 2012 to:

Norton Sound Health Corporation Public Relations Office Attn: Darlene Trigg 306 West 5th Avenue/Box 966 Nome, AK 99762

THE WINNER WILL RECEIVE:

$250 and a plaque, to be hung in the new hospital, honoring the winner and explaining the name's origin and significance.

Encore "Bering Sea Gold" Nome's dredging fleet set for season II

By Diana Haecker

Five hundred tons of mining equipment is on the way to Nome with Northland Service's first barge, slated to arrive in the Gold Rush City around June 5. Dredges, pontoon boats, ripper tables, Coachman Travel RV's, camper vans, machinery, trucks, trailers, even hundreds of pounds of groceries are on the manifest and have left the Seattle port on Monday

The barge is headed for Anchorage with next stop Nome. Northland had such high volume of cargo for the first barge that the company decided to add another barge to their voyage schedule and run a barge non-stop from Anchorage to Nome, bypassing the usual stops along the way. A quarter of their entire 2,000ton cargo that includes goods headed for Nome, the Norton Sound and some Yukon villages, consists of dredge equipment, mining heavy machinery and personal goods related to the companies or individuals dredging or mining.

Marine transportation company Alaska Logistics has another two dozen dredges on their first voyage. According to DNR officials, a Pro-West Contractors barge is also bringing heavy machinery and mining equipment to Nome.

As of Monday, the Dept. of Natural Resources had 121 permit applications out of which 77 permits have been issued. DNR mineral manager Kerwin Krause said that those permits are mostly for the two recreational mining areas, on West and East Beach. Krause said the remaining permits would most likely be issued as the DNR is still processing them. "Sometimes applications are missing required information, which requires the applicant provide the information before we continue processing them," Krause said. There are also 12 additional multi-year permits that have been issued previ-

Last fall the DNR held a rare offshore lease sale that resulted in a mix of gold miners from small scale operations to several large and international gold exploration companies buying large offshore tracts and adding new gold mining outfits to the local Nome dredging fleet.

In addition, the TV reality show "Bering Sea Gold" piqued the interest of more fortune seekers and since its premier in January, Lower 48 prospectors have inquired with city officials, Nome businesses, Visitor Center, this newspaper, the DNR and barging companies on how to go

Will Delta Western's web site bite it in the britches?

By Sandra L. Medearis

Delta Western's Web site for some time has told viewers—and a reporter— Delta Western was an Alaska corporation.

However, when the fuel distributor intentionally said that, they had their fingers crossed—it was just an advertising fib, according to Delta Western. That advertising lie was just that—marketing intended to court Alaska business, according to Delta Western marketing support specialist since 2004, Ryan L. Macnamara. Delta Western's corporate headquarters are and have been in Seattle, according to Macnamara in his affidavit and other affidavits filed in U.S. District Court—in Seattle.

Delta Western's status as a Washington-based corporation came up as an argument for keeping a case in what it says is home court—Seattle—as Delta Western and Nomebased Bonanza Fuel continue to fight it out over where a lawsuit filed by Bonanza will be heard—state court in Nome or federal court in Seattle. Bonanza has filed suit asking for $1.5 million from Delta Western, extra money retail fuel vendor Bonanza said in court documents that it paid to bring fuel by a USCG icebreaker and a Russian tanker after Delta Western did not deliver fuel as promised last fall.

Macnamara's affidavit filed in court April 30, said that until early 2005, the Web site listed Seattle as headquarters.

"However, in early 2005, a decision was made to state that its headquarters was in Anchorage, Alaska, and not Seattle, Washington. The reason for the change was to communicate to our customers in Alaska our location in Alaska for the pur-

Congratulations on the many newspaper awards garnered by the Nome Nugget . All are important and need honored recognition, but I am particularly pleased to see that you received the Howard Rock First Amendment Award. One of the many hats I've worn over the years is Intellectual Freedom Chair for the Delaware Library Association. While you are working in the publishing world, trying to keep citizens informed, I've been working in the library world, trying to keep materials on all sides of every issue available to all (including young people). We are all working hard to keep the tenets of the first amendment alive and well. Cheers from the other side of our country! Peggy Dillner Elkton, MD 21921

Dear Editor,

I wonder if the birders are being informed that they should show respect for hunters while out in the countryside? I think not!

Twice last year during my spring bear hunt I was treated with the utmost disrespect, as I was bow hunting bears up the Kougarok Road. As our friends were bird hunting they experienced the same crap.

There is much effort put forward by the hunter of prepare for a hunt, money spent, time off of work and making sure his weapon is on.

I came very close to breaking a birder's nose last year. I will tell you right now that if it occurs again I will.

Sincerely, Mark Smith Nome, AK 99762

Here at last

The Bering Sea ice is out. What a welcome sight it is to see those big chunks of white pulling anchor and sailing south. The sea gulls are here, the cranes are back, the red polls have arrived and the green slime has made its way down Steadman Street. Real Nomeites know that the green slime is really shark repellant die marker left over from World War II and it has done a fine job keeping the sharks out of town. The lengthening hours and growing intensity of sunlight have worked their magic and colorful, yet ugly trash is revealing its dirty face all over town. Soon Nomeites will be out in full force with shovels, rakes, hoses, brooms and yellow trash bags to put a spiffy face on our summer season.

The task seems monumental and too long in the works, but those eyesores with the condemned signs nailed to their walls will soon be coming down. The big ugly shambles of the Wien Building on Front Street will be history. Structures that are fire traps, health hazards and sewage filled flop house will be abated and hauled to the dump. As soon as we can be sure the nighttime temperatures don't dip below freezing, folks will be planting colorful flower gardens and planters to beautify downtown. Some park benches and a couple picnic tables would be a nice place for folks to catch the sun, enjoy an outside lunch and sit while waiting for a cab.

We need to put some more thought and action into making downtown Nome a more user-friendly city and it can be done without the price tag being too costly. Street patrol can keep the inebriates from exploiting the public amenities. So, Nomeites, let's shake off the winter drabs and put a bright sunny face on our hometown.

Many more vessels, barges and equipment for oil drilling will be in the Bering Sea and Arctic Ocean this

Not only is the pollution coming from vessels, tankers, large oceangoing vessels and large river entrances but from rivers inside entrances, shore lines of ocean, coves and bays where it is populated. People wonder where the pollution is coming from...it is coming from pollution from air, rivers, lakes, shorelines and off shorelines where so many vessels are traipsing. No wonder the sea, ocean and rivers are polluted and making sea and ocean creatures look so ill.

Neighboring countries of Alaska are polluting each other.

"Where are our Representatives who are voted by the people of Alaska?"

Respectfully, Gabriel Myomick Anchorage, AK 99507

Dear Editor,

It's just me again; you guys need to address the amount of actual time our kids are in school. Back in our day we went to school a solid 180 days-rain or shine, snow or blizzard-we had school five days a week. If it was way too stormy out one day, we made it up at Saturday school.

I guess if the teachers had to have In-service they had it on the weekends, because come Monday we were expected to be there. We got held back a year if we missed so many days a year/quarter.

The other big shame I think is that the school districts (Government maybe) are lowing the standards needed for kids to graduate. No wonder U.S.A. is so far down on the educational list.

Our kids are supposed to be smarter than us, not dumber. No wonder my child went to school somewhere else—what a shame.

All right you kids—yea, you graduated; now get off your butts and go get your training/schooling while it's free—like I keep telling you. Tired of your lazy butts just getting into trouble. Kilumik-get to it now.

I'm disappointed in the way it seems like Unalakleet seems to get the short end of the stick. I would think we should at least be on the nightly news channel weather since aren't we the place the Iditarod people tend to sneak away from each other? Instead we often get to sit at airports for hours on end, when they could have told us to come back later or we could check in later, and we could visit our friends or shopped some more.

Along with the Physical Therapist, has missed her last three travel visits to Unalakleet, and won't be here until June. I know a few of us who would benefit by their coming here more often. As it is, it's been a pretty slow recovery and the picking time is here again.

This place is a great place to live and yet we can't seem to create jobs here so people could stay here. I tried to tell the people at Norton Sound Health Corporation and Kawerak, that I think some of their positions could be based out of Unalakleet, that people could travel/do the job from here just as easily and they said they'd think signs state budgets Governor

By Diana Haecker

Governor Sean Parnell on Monday signed the FY 2013 capital and operating budget, totaling $12.1 billion. The operating budget totals $8.9 billion, the capital budget just under $3 billion. Parnell vetoed more than $66 million, $50 million of which were a one-time payment to the Judicial Retirement System.

Parnell also signed a $453 million general obligation bond package that includes $10 million for Nome Port Design and Construction as well as $10 million for Kotzebue's Cape Blossom Road and Deep Water Port.

Projects for Nome and areas that survived the Governor's red pen are: Nome State building and courthouse: $5 million; Nome harbor improvements: $1.5 million; Nome Airport runway safety area improvements (federal funds) $46.7 million; Norton Sound Health Corp. Quyana Care facility construction $7.55 million; Nome-Council road repair mile 4 to 16 (federal funds): $2.5 million; Nome east Sclaircore replacement and expansion, phase 2: $3.09 million; Nome renewable energy expansion and optimization: $4.07 million; Nome multi-purpose loader and snow blower: $600,000; Anvil Mountain Correctional Center deferred maintenance: $1.7 million. House district 39 received a total of $35.7 million.

Region wide the following projects and items made it into the budget: Tucked away in the operating budget, Little Diomede receives $200,000 in Essential Air Service funding, which with matching funds, now makes it possible to provide regular passenger service to and from Little Diomede. Diomede also will get $110,000 in federal funds towards a snow removal equipment building. Savoonga gets $194,000 for heavy equipment; Shaktoolik is going to receive $1.5 million for a multi-purpose facility; almost $10 million for K-12 school renovations and $240,260 for a surplus wind energy recovery for water system. Unalakleet gets $3 million towards a new public safety building and Wales $150,000 for health clinic improvements. Gambell will receive a new excavator for $155,000; wind energy recovery for water heater at $240,260. Golovin is in for almost $400,000 worth of heavy equipment and Koyuk will see $150,000 toward a multi-use facility. Parnell crossed out $973,000 for the expansion of the Alaska pre-kindergarten pilot project.

The Iditarod Trail Committee, Inc. will receive $100,000 for "Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race Enhancement."

Parnell signed off on the Roads to Resources to the tune of $28.5 million, including $4 million for a road into the Ambler Mining District, a road to Umiat Foothills for $10 million and building the first part to the Western Access Route, aka road to Nome, by building a road to Tanana for $10 million.

pose of doing business with DWs customers with respect to orders, pricing information, and the day to day business of selling fuel in Alaska," so said Macnamara's affidavit. "Our advertising to our customers for the purpose of ordering and conducting day to day operations which was modified in early 2005 had nothing to do with the fact that Seattle remained the operative Corporate Headquarters of DW for management decisions, finance, and Seattle remained the nerve center of corporate decision making, not withstanding the representations made in our websites [sic] and marketing brochures which were for marketing purposes."

Macnamara is responsible for Web site content and promotional brochures, according to the court document.

The Web site content was changed several weeks ago. Now Delta Western bills itself as "Alaska's Petro-leum Distributor." However, the "Contact us" page recently listed Anchorage as corporate headquarters and Seattle as the "business office." Those designations have been removed from the city names and the site just lists Seattle and Anchorage offices today. The Delta Western's president, Ann Humphreys, is listed at the Seattle address, while the vice president of marketing and sales and vice president of supply and logistics as well as the credit office are listed at the Anchorage address Bonanza filed the suit in Alaska Superior Court in February, saying both companies were Alaska companies. In March, Delta Western gave notice it was moving the case to U.S. District Court, saying Delta Western was a Washington corporation. Delta Western said because the two companies are in different states and that because the issue concerns sea transportation on navigable waters, it falls under federal court jurisdiction. Documents filed in U.S. District Court show Delta Western established as a corporation with the Washington Secretary of State office in 2000, and has filed other state documents as a Washington corporation since 2000. However, Delta Western has been doing business in Alaska since 1985, according to company information.

Delta Western has filed responses to Bonanza's demands for fuel delivery and compensation that say the company was excused from its contract by impracticality of delivery because of weather and an iced-over Bering Sea and Nome harbor—an act of God or force majeure, over which it had no control. On top of that, Bonanza was inhospitable to Delta Western's offers of assistance to secure and deliver fuel by other means, according to Delta Western's court claims. Bonanza argues that Delta Western came with too little too late, offering $800,000, too little, and then reducing that offer to $500,000 soon after.

Delta Western said it offered fuel to Bonanza at discounted prices to solve the expense and also was making arrangements for an icebreaker delivery that was pre-empted by Bonanza's contract in December with Vitus Marine. Vitus Marine contracted with the Russian-flagged iceclass tanker Renda to make the delivery.

Delta Western also in court documents said it offered fuel from its storage in Dutch Harbor, that the Renda unnecessarily loaded in South Korea, according to Delta Western. Delta Western has not to date filed documents as foundation for these claims. Delta Western said in letters to Bonanza executives, filed in the case, that Bonanza Fuel jumped the gun by filing a lawsuit rather than come to an informal or mediated solution to the delivery schedule and expense issues.

Show us the invoices, Delta Western said in letter and e-mail exchanges filed asking the court to protect it from damage from Bonanza and forces it said it could not control. Bonanza has filed an itemized list of additional expenses—not backed up by documents—totaling around $1,544,000, associated with having fuel arrive with another supplier in January via a dramatic voyage by the Renda under escort by the USCG icebreaker Healy.

Delta Western, owned by North Star Utilities Group, dominates the Western Alaska market with fuel barge deliveries to villages along the Western Alaska coast and up and down the banks of the Yukon River. Delta Western also markets and distributes petroleum products in Southeast Alaska, Bristol Bay, the Pribilof Islands and along the Aleutian Chain.

Delta Western filed a motion in court April 19 to dismiss the suit or transfer it to federal court. On the same day, Bonanza filed a motion asking the court to return the case to Alaska's state court. Both companies have asked for oral arguments on the about finding gold in or near goldbearing sands of the Bering Sea.

The shore-fast ice moved out in front of Nome last Friday night and as the first barges are headed for Nome packed with mining equipment, trucks and trailers, Original Productions, the film makers who produced the TV reality show 'Bering Sea Gold" already wrapped up their first few weeks of filming in Nome.

Bering Sea Gold broadcasted the message of gold to be found in Nome to a large audience. The January 27 premiere of the show was the highest-rated series launched on the Discovery Channel ever. About 3.66 million viewers tuned in to the premiere and the numbers didn't drop much as the season's next eight episodes progressed. The show, out of the same production outfit that created the "Deadliest Catch" and the "Ice Road Truckers", struck a cord with some of these three million viewers on "living the dream."

Executive producer Jeff Conroy said that the show was a hit right off the bat. "From the very beginning, we had the feeling that we're on to something special," Conroy said. The crew filmed all summer with a local cast of Steve and Shawn Pomrenke, Scott Meisterheimer, Zeke Tenhoff and Emily Riedel, Ian and Scott Foster, Vernon Adkinson and Conroy said that the concept of the show came up when they were filming in a documentary on the 2008 Iditarod when they got word of these dredges looking for gold in the summertime in the Bering Sea. Being masters of drama, the filmmakers immediately figured that Bering Sea plus gold plus colorful Nome characters probably would be a winning formula. "We were looking for interesting people, straight shooters, who will tell you what's on their mind, good or bad or otherwise." Conrov said.

That's what they found. Conroy said that these times are interesting for gold seekers. And, he said, "Gold makes people behave differently." Conroy said the plan is to film another season with the same characters they worked with last year, and maybe add on others as they appear. "We don't go into a season knowing what will happen," Conroy said. "It's not scripted. It's such an intense environment of making or losing a lot of money that we don't have make things up," he said.

They started filming footage for three or four special episodes focused on dredging under the sea ice. A week ago, they wrapped up filming under the ice. The crew consisting of 20 to 25 people will come back in mid-May and continue filming. As done in the last season, they will interview their protagonists and have their cameras on them the entire summer. "We talk to them about what's going on, about their relationships," said Conroy. "We are annoying them all day and, yes, it's hard to have a camera in your face all day long.

Asked about the impact that Nome feels in reaction to the show, Conroy said, "We had no idea we would hit such a nerve." After the "Deadliest Catch" show, Conroy said, Dutch Harbor saw an increase in people arriving from the lower 48 to look for jobs in the fishing fleet. However, the lure of gold seems to be sparking a greater interest than the prospect of battling high seas and seasickness. Not deterred by the costs of barging equipment to Nome, the high cost of living or the housing crunch, 121 permit applicants are poised to mine this summer. In comparison, the DNR last year issued only around a third, or roundabout 40 permits to gold miners.

Conroy said that his crew maintains relationships with city officials. After the DNR got inundated with calls for information from prospective miners, the Discovery Channel agreed to add a DNR disclaimer at the end of the episodes. Conroy said they don't really feel responsible for the new gold rush that is about to hit Nome. "It's not necessarily us, but it's the gold that lures the miners to Nome," Conroy said.

"The TV show is a faster vehicle to spread the word, but it was only a matter of time. We speeded up the process, but we truly wouldn't want to impact anyone else's lifestyle,' Conroy said. In the context of the ongoing recession that in some ways liberates people to dare living their bottled-up dreams, Conroy said that the show is telling a story of inspiration. "We are at an interesting time in our country," Conroy said.

The show exemplifies how a few hard-working individuals take their destiny into their own hands and go for new opportunities. "I think the point is to inspire people to go out and do something different," Conroy

The City of Nome has spent time and effort on figuring out where to put the new dredges and pontoon boats that will be rolling off the first barge. The troopers and police are aware of potential problems, the Coast Guard announced an educational presence by the end of May and the Alaska Marine Safety Education Association is going to hold a one-day workshop on cold water safety and survival skills for gold dredgers at the Northwest Campus in DNR's Kerwin Krause said that they are in the midst of hiring a seasonal DNR representative in Nome. We hope to have a person on board for the May 31 meeting in Nome," Krause said. The deadline for the DNR permit to mine in the two recreational public areas is May 30.

School Board honors two retirees

By Lori Head

With heartfelt appreciation, the Nome Board of Education recognized Diana Adams and Joy Hewitt, both retiring this year, for their combined 55 years of dedication to the school district.

Joy Hewitt, librarian, then reciprocated with a beautiful, framed print titled, "Compulsory Learning," to be placed in the Elementary Library. It features three of her favorite things — a dog, a child and a book — with the girl reading a book to the dog.

Hearing of delegations/individuals

Laura Lawrence, parent, addressed the board and introduced musician Ed Littlefield, who is working with Anvil City Science Academy students through the Artist in Residence program. Lawrence also encouraged the board to consider developing a formal arts curriculum in the future as the current program generally relies on the sharing of talents and interests by staff on a year-to-year basis.

Hunter Bellamy, TATU's (Teens Against Tobacco Use) presidentelect and Jacob Martin, presidential advisor, requested that the board consider adding to the student handbook and policy a mandatory attendance of a tobacco information class, as a consequence, if a student is found with or using tobacco.

NACTEC program sum-

"NACTEC has completed 16 out of 17 vocational training sessions planned for the year" according to a written report submitted by Doug Walrath, director.

At the time of the report, NACTEC students had earned 114 college credits through dual credit courses, 73 food worker cards, 47 first aid certifications, 34 AED/CPR certifications, 17 State of Alaska learner's permits and 5 driver's licenses

Superintendent report

Scott Handley has accepted the NBHS principal position for the upcoming school year. Handley has worked the last three years in the Kenai school district.

NPS FY13 budget has been presented to the Nome Common Council and the council's requests were received. Mike Brawner, superintendent, reported that predictions are that the governor will "sign off" on state funding before him by the end of May. The school district will then have a final meeting with the Nome Common Council regarding the budget.

Brawner stated that he didn't have any answers but wanted the board to be aware that the housing market in Nome was impacting teacher housing and hiring. "Our apartments are full," explained Brawner. A prospective candidate for the guidance counselor position was consistently quoted $2,000 to $2,500 for two-bedroom apartments in town, and not available soon enough, which ultimately led the candidate elsewhere. Brawner has up to six teachers staying in the dorm area for the upcoming school year with five teachers on the waiting list to get into the apartments.

Action items

The board passed on a first reading of a revision of BP 3315 Relations with Vendors which added text regarding E-Rate vendors. They also passed a second and final reading on BP 6145 Extracurricular and Co curricular Activities.

Two contracts were approved, one for the new high school principal, Scott Handley, and another for a high school science teacher, Kristin Canon.

A memorandum of agreement between the Association of Alaska School Boards and Nome Public Schools for a potential Community Engagement Grant was approved by the school board as well.

Upcoming events

- May 20 Baccalaureate 4:00 p.m. at Lutheran Church
- May 22 High School graduation - 6:00 p.m. at NBHS gym
- May 23 8th grade promotion 9:30 a.m. at NBHS gym
- May 24 6th grade promotion 12:30 p.m. at NES commons

The board rescheduled their next meeting, a work session, from May 22 to May 29 due to a conflict with graduation. Agenda items to include BP 5113/AR 5113 Absences and Excuses which involves the school attendance, truancy and make-up work policies. After thanking Jacob Martin, student representative to the school board, and wishing him well as he graduates from NBHS this month, the board adjourned to then meet in executive session regarding an update on the classified negotiations.

Sitnasuak Native Corporation – Where Is The Outrage?

In 2009 all was going incredibly well at Sitnasuak Native Corporation, in fact the company had record-breaking sales of over $220 million and profits over $15M. SNC had never performed so well, not even close and this was the back of the previous year that was also record setting. SNC was on the verge of paying off all of its debts and well positioned to reward shareholders tens of millions of dollars in dividends in the future. SNC expected to reach over $300M in sales and $25M in profits by 2012. This never happened because a few people were far more concerned about themselves than the company and that has had a devastating effect on the company.

That year, Robbie Fagerstrom decided to fire Neal Foster for mismanagement and other actions that were very detrimental to the company. Seven hours after Mr. Fagerstrom fired Mr. Foster he and others made false accusations against Mr. Fagerstrom that caused him to leave the company. Since then all of the accusations made by Foster and others have proved to be false.

The actions by Neal Foster supported by existing Board Members Andy Miller and Crystal Anderson have led to a great destruction of shareholder value. The company business operations have lost millions the last two years. All the recent dividends given to shareholders were from profits made during the prior leadership. SNC had once such a promising future making tens of millions of dollars in profits, now consistently loses money on business operations (excluding 7(j)). See chart below from Annual Report as to profits after I left in 2009.

PERFORMANCE

The new management has a track record of failure and continues to fail. The chairman continues to support this team despite their failure. To make matters worse the 8(a) companies that had historically contributed to most of the sales have only one backlog contract for 2013. This problem is amplified by the fact that the DoD budget is due for a major cut in 2013. Under my leadership we always had numerous contracts in backlog. I expect 2013 losses at the 8(a) manufacturing unit to be no less then $2-3m in 2013 and could be more. Dividends will soon be a thing of the past.

As shareholders and the Board of Directors of the corporation, we each have responsibilities, duties, accountability and a fiduciary [articles of incorporation and bylaws and the State of Alaska state statues] obligation for the best interests of the corporation on how it's being managed. In 2010 the Board of Directors approved the "19 listed Corporate Values" and you can find these values on the inside page of the cover sheet of the Annual Report and just after the "Sitnasuak Mission Statement". I would encourage all shareholders to read this list of values, to see if they are being practiced by the corporate officers, chairman and the majority members of the Board in their management of the corporation.

Having spent 33 years of experience with our company - on the Board and as an employee, I do not believe they are managing by these values in the best interests of the corporation or for the shareholders. During the 33 years with the company I was always held at a higher standard of performance by the shareholders, than now! At the annual meeting, I will be handing out a list of questions for these officers and the majority of board members regarding their accountabilities of their performance and they should be expecting these questions! And, their responses need to be straight answers to the shareholders. Remember they are receiving a high compensation for these results.

Having been encouraged by a number of shareholders to ask for the reason why Andy Miller, Jr. [nominee] was required to resign from the Council of the Nome Eskimo Community and as a Board of Director for Norton Sound Health Corporation? What rules/laws did he violate? This will be one of a number of questions that I will be asking at the annual meeting. Has there been a practice to protect board members that support the leadership despite the damage they may have caused or contributed to shareholders?

There needs to be a return to accountable leadership at SNC – enough is enough – the shareholders have suffered enough.

Commercial crab catch is second highest in Norton Sound history

Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game report

Congratulations to Norton Sound fishermen for one of the best winter crab seasons in history. The commercial catch totaled 8,934 crabs on May 13 and is second only to the harvest of 9,625 crabs in the first winter commercial season of 1977-78. Forty-one permit holders registered for the 2011-12 fishery, compared to 37 in 1977-78.

Norton Sound Seafood Products in Nome paid commercial crabbers a dock price of $6.50 a pound this winter, about double the price paid for winter crab in 2010-11.

The commercial winter crab fishery closed May 15, and catcher-sellers must turn in all fish tickets by May 22.

Winter subsistence crab permits issued through May 10 totaled 202, which ranks fourth all-time and is the highest number of permits issued since 1985. For subsistence fishermen, there is no closed season for taking king crab in Norton Sound, but a subsistence permit is required. Separate permits are required for winter crabbing (through the ice) and summer (open water). Permits issued for the 2011-12 winter subsistence crab fishery are valid through buying 800 tons in the Norton Sound the end of May, and must be turned in the first week of June. The summer season begins on June 1 for subsistence crabbing and requires a summer permit. Subsistence permits are free.

Subsistence permits can be picked up at the Nome office of the Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game, or mailed out to village residents. If a sport fish license is used to fish for crab, a harvest record form must be picked up at the Nome office before crabbing. Sport fish license holders can keep only 6 male crabs that are 4 and 3/4 inches or larger each day. Subsistence crab permit holders can keep all crabs caught.

Subsistence fishermen, please turn in tagged crabs that you harvest. Bring the tagged crab or the intact shell with the tag to the ADF&G office in Nome. The crab will be returned to the fisherman after size data is recorded. A tag reward will be given for tags turned in to ADF&G along with the intact shell and capture location. Commercial fishermen, please return all sublegal crabs to the sea, leaving any tags on.

For more information, contact ADF&G fishery biologist Joyce Soong, phone (907) 443-8197, fax (907) 443-5893.

sac roe commercial fishery," Menard announced. "Thanks to Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation for bringing a buyer north. Once the department opens the season, commercial permit holders will need to check with Norton Sound [Seafood Products] to make sure there is a market for their catch." Menard said the fishery usually opens in the second week of June, depending on sea ice conditions.

"For the sac roe fishery, a 2012 commercial sac roe herring permit is needed along with a government issued picture driver's license or other pictured government issued identification," Menard continued. vessels commercial herring fishing must be registered with the [Division of Motor Vehicles] and have a ADF&G vessel license. Crewmembers participating in the commercial herring fishery will need a commercial crewmember's license. However, a 2012 State of Alaska commercial fishing permit can substitute for the crewmember's license. For example, a 2012 commercial salmon or commercial crab permit can be used as a crewmember's license.

"The season for subsistence herring fishing and subsistence kelp gathering is open year-round to Alaska residents, and no permits are required," Menard noted.

Salmon fisheries outlook

Menard said the department does not expect the Norton Sound king salmon run to be strong enough to allow for commercial fishing.

"The chum salmon run is expected to be average, but not nearly as strong as the last two years, which had the best chum runs to Norton Sound in 25 years," Menard noted. "Both the pink salmon and coho [silver] salmon runs should be better than last year and will be similar to the long term average.

"In northern Norton Sound the chum run is not expected to be as strong as southern Norton Sound. and fishing time is expected to be reduced compared to last year when the department opened commercial fishing any time tenders were available," Menard said. "For the seventh year in a row the Nome Subdistrict will not be under Tier II fishing restrictions.

"During the even numbered years since 2004, the subsistence salmon harvest in the Nome Subdistrict has been the best since 1986. The high harvests are a result of the record pink salmon runs, and the 2012 subsistence salmon harvest is again expected to rival the harvests of recen

Rock Stars in the 56er pod perform Lip Sync Contest

Last Friday at the Elementary School saw a fabulous event: the second annual 56er Lip Sync Contest. This event started last year in the 5th and 6th Grade. The idea was to bring out the showmanship of students who might not otherwise choose to perform in front of an audience by allowing them to lip-sync and dance to their favorite music. This year's event included an actual choral performance by the fifth and sixth graders. The large audience witnessed the magic of lip-syncing as normally softspoken students were transformed into rock stars. This year's show closed with a raucous vocal performance of "Dynamite" in honor of the late Jamison Thrun, whose performance of the tune last year will not soon be forgotten.

Savoonga men cited for illegally trading walrus ivory and polar bear hides

By Diana Haecker

Ten men from Savoonga received federal violation notices for allegedly having sold walrus ivory, polar bear hides and hundreds of other wildlife parts to a couple of Glennallen residents, who were busted for their illegal trade.

According to the U.S. Dept. of Justice, Jesse Joseph Leboeuf, 37, and his partner Loretta Audrey Sternbach, 52, conspired to purchase marine mammal parts in Savoonga and to illegally sell and transport them to non-Alaska-Native buyers in Alaska, Colorado and other states and coun-

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service cited Savoonga residents Ronnie Ronald Kingeekuk,

Lawrence Kingeekuk, David Akeya, Calvin Akeya, Patrick Newhall, Richmond Toolie, Floyd Kingeekuk, Carl Pelowook and William Parks for illegally supplying Leboeuf and Sternbach with raw walrus tusks and polar bear hides in exchange for cash, drugs, firearms, cigarettes and snowmachines

Several federal agencies have been investigating the case. Leboeuf and Sternbach were arrested and charged with conspiracy to illegally commercializing marine mammal parts and for several weapon violations. They were indicted, pleaded guilty and were sentenced last November.

Leboeuf, also known as Wayne Gerrard Christian was sentenced to 108 months in prison. Sternbach was sentenced to 42 months in prison. Investigators found 1,000 pounds of walrus ivory, including 150 whole tusks, two polar bear hides, hundreds of other wildlife parts, drugs and more than 24 guns, including four machine guns and a silencer.

The sale of the ivory, hides and animal parts violates the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

even numbered years. Subsistence salmon permits will be issued in the Nome office beginning June 1, and all Alaska residents are qualified to receive a permit. Subsistence permits are free.

"Department personnel will visit northern Norton Sound villages where subsistence salmon permits are required the second half of May or early June to issue permits for those areas," Menard added. "Village residents can call 1-800-560-2271 if they missed getting a permit when Fish & Game was visiting their

The ADF&G estimates a total run of 20,000 sockeye salmon to the Pilgrim River and Salmon Lake this year, Menard reports. "The 20K figure includes the subsistence harvest," he wrote in an email. "For a commercial fishery, the department would need to project a 30K in-river goal.'

Commercial red king crab

Menard said the department expects to open Norton Sound's summer commercial red king crab season in early July, depending on ice conditions and buyer interest. The department will set the Guideline Harvest Level for the fishery after the North Pacific Fishery Management Council meets June 4-12 in Kodiak. The council approves the Overfishing Limit and Allowable Biological Catch for the fishery. The council's crab plan team recently set the OFL at 530,000 pounds and the ABC at 480,000 pounds for the 2012

"The department sets the GHL, but cannot exceed the ABC." Menard explained. In March 2012 the Alaska Board of Fisheries adopted a revised GHL for the Norton Sound summer commercial red king crab fishery that allows the department to set the harvest quota at up to 15 percent of the legal male biomass when it is estimated at more than 3 million pounds. Menard said the current legal male biomass is estimated at about 3.21 million pounds.

King crab permit holders can register for the commercial fishery at the ADF&G office in Nome beginning in June or with department personnel when they visit the villages, Menard added.

Menard expects to complete a fisheries management plan for the upcoming season on May 22, and said it will be available to the public soon afterward. For additional information about the upcoming fishing season, call the ADF&G office in Nome at 443-5167 or 1-800-560-

Are You Healthier than a Second Grader?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Mr. Slingsby's Nome Elementary second grade class recently sent me hand-written letters. Each letter contained a question regarding a medical problem. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Lawrence, I sometimes get nosebleeds. What should I do to make them stop?

Sincerely, Sadie Ellison

Dear Sadie,

Thank you for your excellent question. I think a lot of people will be glad you asked about nosebleeds because nosebleeds are very common. Nosebleeds can make a big mess and can sometimes be scary. But you can stop the bleeding quickly once you know the right thing to do.

Most nosebleeds come from a cut in the blood vessels in the front part of the nose. These blood vessels can be damaged from picking, scratching, or blowing the nose.

Allergies and colds can also make the nose bleed. Sometime a bump on the head can set off bleeding from the nose that may or may not be serious depending on the severity of the head injury.

When your nose starts bleeding, it is important to stay calm and gently squeeze the soft portion of your nose (everything below the hard bony ridge) using a finger and thumb. It is best to lean slightly forward to prevent any blood from running down the back of the throat.

Hold the nose tightly for at least 10 minutes. Avoid peeking to see if the bleeding has stopped.

Do not place anything in your nose to stop the bleeding. People often make the mistake of packing the nose with tissue. This causes more cuts and can make the bleeding harder to control.

Your parents may take you to the doctor if n o s e bleeds keep coming back or if you have trouble getting the bleeding to stop.

Dear Dr. Lawrence, I get lots of headaches. Sometimes it starts in the morning, sometimes in the afternoon. They hurt so bad! How do I cure it? What is that word you make kids say to make their tongue go down in the back? Sincerely, Jenae Matson

Dear Jenae,

ALASKA

DOCTOR

Thank you for your questions. I am sorry to hear you get headaches

Headaches have many causes. Sometimes just using your extra brain hard at school can cause pain in your head. But here are some things that may help keep you from having headaches:

First, sit up straight. Many headaches occur because of poor posture, especially when doing detailed schoolwork. If you sit up straight, the muscles in your neck and scalp can relax.

Next, make sure you have plenty of light to do your work. Your eyes do not have to work as hard in a bright room. Working in a darkened room can strain the eyes and cause a headache.

Also, tell your parents or teacher if words or objects look blurry to you. Sometimes headaches are an early sign of eyestrain that may require a visit to the eye doctor.

Make sure you drink plenty of water each day. Headaches are one of the earliest signs of dehydration. In the same way, eat healthy snacks like fruits and fresh vegetables. Too much sugar, soda (pop), or sports drinks can cause headaches.

Before taking medicine for headaches, many doctors recommend keeping a headache diary. In your diary, write down some details about each headache including the time it occurs, what you were doing, and what you ate that day. Many times this helps identify the real cause. It is a good idea to see your doctor if you have headaches more than once a week or if your head hurts for over an hour, especially after you finish vour schoolwork.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

My friends have had stitches before but my brother got a cut and had it glued shut. What's better? Sincerely, Maggie Taylor

Dear Maggie,

Sometimes doctors close a cut with a medical type of super-glue that holds the edges of skin together. I like using the glue because it does not hurt and usually leaves only a very small scar.

Do not try to glue a wound together at home. That would be dangerous and can cause a big mess. I once knew someone who glued his fingers together on acci-

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

We go to camp in the summer and I always get covered in mosquito bites. Even if I use bug dope! How do I make them stop itching? Thanks, Keri Ann Russell Dear Keri Ann, Great question. Sometimes mosquitoes get past even the best bug dope.

When you get a really itchy bite you can sometimes make the itching stop by applying a paste of baking soda, a dab of apple cider vinegar, a thin layer of toothpaste, or a drop of lemon juice. Sometimes people find it helpful to put an ice cube on the bite for a few seconds to stop the itching. Other people try the opposite approach and apply a very warm cloth to the bite for a few seconds. Let me know if one of these tricks works for you.

LIVING HISTORY - Retired Air Force Col. Suellyn Novak gave a Living History presentation to fourth grade students at the Nome Elementary School on May 10. Novak spoke about the Lewis and Clark expedition sporting the attire of the time period and showed the kids the blackpowder rifle and how explorers kept the blackpowder safe from the elements.

Listen! I am standing at the door, knocking; if you hear my voice and open the door, I will come in with you and eat with you, and you with me."

Remember that famous picture of Jesus—he is standing outside a door? He is knocking on the door. But if you look closely you will see there is no door handle on the outside of the door! He is waiting for the person who is inside to open the door. That's where the door handle is. The artist (Warner Sallman) wanted to tell us something. God will not force his way into our lives and knock down the doors and walls- but he will patiently knock and

This is a daily ongoing invitation—working on our relationship with God and opening the door of our lives. God wants to be in a relationship of trust and guidance, support and challenge. God wants to shape all parts of our lives: our vocation, our use of gifts, our finances, setting of priorities, our relationship to neighbors and our community, church, world. As we open up the door to our life we open it to his spirit and will. "Believing in God" is not a one time event—it is a continual act of faith to hear his call, open up to it and follow.

The passage above, which comes from the Book of Revelation, was written to Christians during a time when the political powers felt threatened by Christianity and began to persecute the followers. The Book of Revelation encourages people not to give up the faith though it looks like God is not in control. God's Word through this Book encourages people to keep on believing and following their Lord. Structures may fall, people you love die, but keep the faith. Be open to God's mighty hand at work in sometimes gentle and other times dramatic ways.

I just returned from a Prayer Service that I led with the inmates at AMCC. I shared this scripture and message with them. Obviously anyone incarcerated has a real opportunity to assess their life. They are "doing time" and it can be spent for ill or good. Often the things we run away from or react to will surface when we are still and quiet. We have a chance to "face" our past and work through some of it. Grief is one of the moving forces in all of our lives. We can walk through it in a way that leads to healing and acceptance. I thought of that as I left AMCC this morning. I ask you to pray with me. What might God want to open in our lives as individuals, families, church, and community? How might we respond and experience his renewal in our lives?

Commission created to formulate Alaska's Arctic policy

By Diana Haecker

While in its second session, the Alaska 27th legislature passed a joint resolution to create an Arctic Policy Commission that is tasked to shape an arctic policy. With significant climate change-driven uncertainties, opportunities and challenges affecting the Arctic, the Alaska legislature recognized the need for a policy that asserts Alaska's rights in the far North. Nome Mayor Denise Michels and the Bering Straits Native Corporation submitted letters of intent to fill a seat at the commission.

The commission was one of the recommendations that came out of the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force that researched the opportunities and challenges of the changing Arctic. Mayor Michels had been a member of the NWTF. The Speaker of the House Mike Chenault and Senate President Gary Stevens are charged to appoint most of the 20-member panel. On the commission are three seats for Senators appointed by the Senate President and three Representatives appointed by the House Speaker. The governor gets to appoint one member from the executive branch. Chenault and Stevens jointly appoint members representing the federal government, one tribal entity, the mining industry, the oil and gas industry, an accredited Alaska university, fisheries, a local government, a coastal community with experience in a coastal management program, an international Arctic organization, a conservation group, marine transportation and logistics, a Native corporation and a licensed marine pilot.

Mayor Michels in her letter of intent said that she is seeking a seat designated to represent a local government or for a coastal community with experience in a coastal management program. She wrote that the city council knows and approves of her request to seek an appointment to the commission.

BSNC has also submitted a letter of interest for the seat designated for a Native corporation. "It is essential that the Bering Strait region have a seat at the table due to our strategic location and the fact that the lands along the coastline from St. Michael to Shishmaref are, in large part, owned by BSNC and the village corporations," BSNC vice-president Matt Ganley wrote to the Nugget in an email correspondence.

The Arctic Policy Commission is tasked to make preliminary recommendations on an Arctic policy by January 2014 and deliver a final Arctic policy by January 15, 2015.

Shall shallow-draft vessels park on the Snake?

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council has introduced a measure to ease port crowding during the oncoming onslaught of gold seekers needing to use the Port of Nome facility for moorage.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

The panel voted at a special meeting Monday to put a Port of Nome tariff amendment into first reading that would require dredges and mining craft that have a draft shallower than 20 inches to tie up the Snake River. In return for staying out of the Small Boat Harbor the proposed amendment would give such users a 50 percent reduction on moorage rates.

On May 17 the Nome Port Commission adopted the tariff revision, now before the Council for approval, which originally set for a draft of less than 30 inches, but then changed the depth to 20 inches. Commissioners went for the shallower draft after Lucas Stotts, assistant harbormaster, measured a representation of dredges and reported that the notwo-alike offshore mining craft have at least shallow draft in common. Putting the cutoff at vessels drawing less than 30 inches of water would put some pretty big dredges into the narrow channel of the Snake River, Stotts told the commission.

Moorage on the Snake River falls under Port of Nome docking facility jurisdiction as far as included by Nome's city limits, meaning as far as Bering Air at least. According to the tariff, the area extends from the corner of the MS 410 property near the concrete launch ramp, to the armor stone at the end of Belmont Street, and up river to the city limit boundary.

Vessels drawing less than 20 inches of water, including support vessels, may only moor in the Snake River area, and may not dock any-

Airport plan minimizes Snake River relocation

By Sandra L. Medearis

The state Dept. of Transportation has released a draft environmental assessment for a $46 million project for runway safety improvements at Nome Airport. Runways do not meet FAA safety standards. Runway Safety Areas need to be adjusted by width and length.

Failure to update the runways to satisfy a federal mandate would result in loss of airport certification. That would mean no jet service.

While an earlier plan called for changing the mouth or the course of the Snake River for four miles to take care of the main runway, the preferred alternative presented at a May 16 meeting will shift the river bed by half its width westward for only 900 feet in order to route it around an extension to the end of the East-West Runway.

While there still will not be enough room to expand the runway by 1,000 feet to fully satisfy requirements, the project will put fill comprising crushed concrete and other manufactured product to support the weight of Boeing 737 aircraft should one overshoot the runway. The material is designed to crush under the weight of the plane to prevent structural damage and to help brake the landing gear. Runways would be graded to broaden them as close as possible to the FAA standard width of 500 feet.

The Crosswind Runway also does not meet safety standards in that the Runway Safety Area is too narrow by 200 feet and lacks safety area beyond either threshold. For improvement, the north threshold would be

Snake and Nome rivers break-up, water comes close to homes

By Diana Haecker

A combination of a record rainfall on Wednesday followed by a recordbreaking 63°F Friday speeded the break-up process of the area's rivers. The Snake River's gauge at the Teller Road Bridge peaked at 10.3 feet on Sunday at 2 p.m. and fell to 9.55 feet at 9 a.m. Monday, the National Weather Service reports.

Snake River resident Marguerite LaRiviere said that water came close to their driveway, but didn't reach their house. However, a neighbor on the south side of the bridge said it's the highest they've seen the river rise in their seven years of living at the banks of the Snake River. "The water is about three feet from our house," said Shoni Evans, Snake River resident. Evans said that the river rose faster than in previous years, due to the warm temperatures and last week's rainfall. Ice jams have been moving along the Snake River, with a few still stuck upriver but a large 25-yard jam near the town Snake River Bridge to Port Road broke loose around 1:30 p.m. on Sunday. On Monday, the Snake River was flowing freely, pushing along chunks of ice toward the harbor channel out to sea.

The Nome River at Dexter is keeping residents on their toes as water is in people's yards and flooding the roads. Dexter resident Gay Sheffield reported that water is creeping closer to their house but no ice jams are visible. Houses are standing like tiny islands surrounded by melt water and river water. At the end of Osborn Road, the Nome River rose over its banks and came within feet of Bev Gelzer's camp on the weekend.

Wes Adkins with the National Weather Service said that break up seemed even keeled and as of press time on Monday, no damages to homes or camps have been reported. Adkins said that the double whammy speeded up break up as record daily rainfall over deep snowpack in the hills caused snow to melt faster than any kind of warm day.

"Then we had a record high temperature with 63°F, beating the record high for May 18, 1980," Adkins said.

Editorial

Too many times folks will say they hate politics, that their vote doesn't count and that no one cares. Well, we have to care enough to get involved with the democratic process. It was my recent good fortune to participate in the grass roots of party politics by attending the Democratic Party State Convention in Fairbanks. It was the first time I had ever attended such a function and I was quite impressed.

Folks really worked well together. It was amazing how committees of 30 or 40 Democrats could work so intensely with such congeniality. The wide range and variety of backgrounds of folks from all over Alaska worked together to craft a party platform that was clear and concise and meet the ideals of all Alaskans. It seemed that the ruralurban divide did not exist. There was unity and willingness to listen to

Alaskan unity is a force to be reckoned with. It shows how grass roots citizens can influence the direction of a party politics. It makes one proud to be an Alaskan and restores faith in the power of the ordinary citizen. -N.L.M. -

Rainfall breaks all time record for May

By Diana Haecker

For the first time this year, Nomeites woke up on Thursday, May 16 to the sound of raindrops dripping from their roofs. This first rainfall made a splash by breaking the all-time record rainfall for May recorded in Nome's 106-year history of weather data keeping, says National Weather Service meteorologist Wes Adkins.

Thursday's rainfall beat the previously set record of 0.76 inches on May 28, 1996. Last Thursday's rainfall didn't seem all that ferocious, but Adkins reminds that May is usually not a wet month. "May and June seem to be dry months, and warm," said Adkins. "Whereas July, August and September are considered our wet months.

Adkins noted a trend of months showing "normal" temperatures alternating with months that had colder than normal temperatures. The trend began in November 2011 proving to be a bitter cold month. December showed normal temps. January 2012 won't be forgotten as it became the coldest January on record for Nome. February showed temperatures in the normal range, until March was colder than usual. April was normal and so far, May seems to continue the pattern, being colder than normal. "In fact, last Friday we tied a record for the lowest high temperature of 24°F," said Adkins.

The Climate Prediction Center calls for June to be slightly below normal temperature-wise and with a near normal level of precipitation.

Patches of ever-shrinking snowfields still dot the tundra around Nome. This winter saw an accumulated snowfall of 81 inches, slightly more than the "normal" of 74 inches. However, Adkins said that previous years had a much higher accumulation of snow, as the winter of 2010/2011 saw a total snowfall of 92

As for the sea ice, the shore-fast ice broke off to reveal the glittering open ocean on Saturday, May 12.

where else in the harbor unless specifically allowed by the port director or harbormaster, according to the proposed amendment. Support vessels may not remain attached to main vessels, or dock in the small boat harbor unless approved by the port director for safety or weather

However, any vessel, regardless of size may apply to the harbormaster for a Snake River permit, which will be issued in the harbormaster's discretion.

Vessels using the Snake River area for launching and haul out purposes only are not required to pay the mooring fee. Improperly moored vessels or vessels drawing less than 20 inches of water docked in the Small Boat Harbor without permission will be relocated at owner's expense, and assessed a fee. Repeat offenders will draw a fine.

At the May 17 Port Commission meeting, Commissioner Iura Leahu raised the issue whether the Port of Nome could have liability for vessels getting into trouble having been directed or confined to moorage on the Snake River.

Discussion winnowed out the stance that the Snake is unimproved moorage at the user's risk. The proposed amendment contains a clause to that affect:

"Users should exercise due care when anchoring along the bank or in the mudflats. All moorage is undertaken at the user's own risk. The Port is not responsible for any damage to persons or property on Port property, including the Snake River area and all other facilities.'

Boat owners also have a certain responsibility for watching their boats and their lines, Joy Baker, harbormaster, said.

The rate for any vessel docking in the Snake River is one-half the rate applicable to the vessel under the harbor docking schedule. Users must apply to the harbormaster for a Snake River docking permit, according to the tariff. Snake River permit holders must comply with the Port of Nome Moorage Policy and all other rules and regulations, including applicable tariff provisions.

Sport fishermen and subsistence users of the Snake River are exempt from the dockage fee.

The Port of Nome tariff amendment will come up for second reading, public hearing and final passage at the next regular meeting of Nome Common Council on May 30.

shifted 600 feet north to improve the RSA at the south end. The RSA would be made broader except at the south end where it would interfere with the Snake River.

Plans expect work to begin in 2013 and finish in 2015 to meet safety regulations demanded by a U.S. Congressional mandate.

"The project is safety driven," with respect to risk to human life and equipment damage, R. J Stumpf, DOT project manager said.

Shane Cherry, an expert in the flow of rivers, said the project to shift the Snake River would construct the new channel with a berm separating it from the flow of the river, with the final stage removing the berm between the two halves. This action would route the Snake River into its new path quickly with resulting turbidity (sediment stirred up) lasting only a day or possibly two, "not weeks," Cherry said.

Sarah Lindberg, an environmental manager with USKH, engineers on the project, said that naturally occurring arsenic above state Dept. of Conservation cleanup levels would require separate handling. Some groundwater with high levels of arsenic at elevations above the river would seep into the excavation, Lindberg said. That water would be removed during excavation to keep it out of the river and disposed in the uplands to filter back into the ground water, in consultation with the ADEC. Preliminary plans call for earth excavated from the riverbank to go to a pad near the north end of the Crosswind Runway (north-south) for disposal. The state Dept. of Transportation worked to avoid high-value wetland areas in the design.

State DNR unlocks disputed mining lease tracts

By Sandra L. Medearis

The murky results of last fall's offshore gold mining lease sale have cleared—finally—to allow the three highest bidders on 16 leases to continue to entertain investors and plan for the mining season. For miners, spring breakup and clearing of the ice is a time that seems will never come. Likewise, three miners and runner-up bidders on the claims have waited all winter for the state to come across with a determination on paperwork the DNR said it did not receive. The holdup has stemmed from an appeal by one bidder.

On May 14, state Dept. of Natural Resources Commissioner Dan Sullivan settled an appeal that had held up award of leases 1, 3, 4, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 28, 36 and 39 after the Sept. 28 Nome Offshore Mining Lease Sale.

"I thought the state would make the right decision," Mike Benchoff, one of the bidding miners, said. "The lion's share of the leases went to a huge foreign company.

"I went out on a limb to get these 10 so we could have someplace for the people from this area to mine," Benchoff said. "I've seen it happen before. A large company comes in, buys up everything in sight and then we end up working for them. No thanks."

The leases went for more than a combined $9.3 million for nearly 24,000 acres of marine placer mining prospects. In the sealed bid portion of the lease sale, the South African company AngloGold Ashanti Ltd, in a consortium with DeBeers Marine, bid nearly $7 million for sizeable leases offshore.

Further details

Settlement of the appeal stemmed partly from two miners working out an agreement on their own.

On Oct. 7, state DNR Division of Mining, Land and Water Director Brent Goodrum issued a determination on incomplete bids for the tracts, saying the division had found that two of the bidders—Mike Benchoff of Nome and Scott Meisterheim of Minnesota—did not submit a required qualification statement. That statement required bidders to affirm citizenship and be 18 years old or above.

Goodrum cited the Alaska law that states "No bid may be considered unless supported by the deposit and information required [by state law] unless the commissioner determines that any omission was immaterial or due to excusable inadvertence and if the omission is corrected in the manner provided by notice of sale."

In his decision, Goodrum led the miners through the loophole, explaining in writing, "In considering the omissions of the two bidders, it appears there may have been some misunderstanding during the sign-in process the day of the sale that contributed to the incomplete bids."

The decision allowed Meisterheim and Benchoff to submit their statement of qualification within 10 days. They did. The DNR had already accepted the men's deposits on the lease tracts after they bid the highest for the tracts on auction day.

On Oct. 27, Goodrum sent copies of the decision to the three highest outcry auction bidders for each of the lease tracts—15 other miners—with information on the appeal process.

Bidder Norm Stiles filed the sole appeal against Goodrum's decision to let Benchoff and Meisterheim back into the auction. He appealed Goodrum's determination relative to Tract 4 on which Stiles was the second highest bidder. Meisterheim was the highest bidder on Tract 4.

Stiles' appeal locked up 12 tracts, the 12 on which Meisterheim and Benchoff were the highest bidders. Tracts 1, 3, 17 and 23 were not locked or "stayed" because Meisterheim and Benchoff were not #1 bidders on those four tracts. The highest bidder on Tract 1 relinquished his bid for Tract 1. Benchoff was second highest bidder for Tract 1, so Tract 1 was stayed by Stiles' appeal. The state offered Tracts 3, 17 and 23 for lease, reducing the incomplete tract sales to a dozen.

Let's play nicely

On Feb. 15, Stiles withdrew his appeal concerning Tract 4 in a deal between Meisterheim and Stiles that gave Stiles the shot at Tract 4 as second highest bidder in exchange for Stiles withdrawing his appeal with the hoped-for result that the DNR would release the other 11 tracts to Meisterheim and Benchoff. On the same day, the DNR received a letter from Kathleen Sullivan, business consultant, on behalf of Meisterheim stating that he wished to withdraw his bid on Tract 4 so that Stiles' could be accepted.

The DNR commissioner's office required Meisterheim to submit a notarized letter withdrawing his bid on Tract 4 and told Meisterheim that the agreement between him and Stiles was a private matter, that a ruling on Goodrum's determination remained a DNR matter.

However, Stiles' withdrawal of his appeal closed the issue, according to Dan Sullivan, DNR commissioner.

"Since there is no appeal pending before me, no further action is necessary and the department has closed the appeal," Sullivan said in his May 14 letter to the miners concerned. With the appeal closed, the Division of Mining, Land and Water could proceed with processing bid documents that include the statement of qualification forms submitted by Benchoff and Meisterheim in November.

Case closed—except that an appellant affected by the final administrative order may appeal to the state Superior Court within 30 days according to state law and court rules. Meisterheim, out of state, could not be immediately reached by telephone.

Nome man to spend 10 years in jail for sex abuse of a minor

By Diana Haecker

Vaughn Johnson, 58, was sentenced to 15 years in jail, with five years suspended last week, after having pleaded guilty to the charge of sexual abuse of a minor in the second degree.

Prior to the plea deal, the charge was sexual abuse of a minor in the first degree. According to court documents, Johnson stood accused of sexually abusing a nine-year-old girl in September 2011. District attorney John Earthman said that the punishment of 10 years in prison is significant for a first offender. Earthman explained that the plea deal is avoiding additional trauma to the victim, who does not have to go through a Grand Jury or jury trial to see justice done.

Johnson is serving 10 years of jail time, 10 years probation and must comply for 15 years with sex offender registration rules after being discharged from jail.

We'll take: TV, computers, VCR, microwaves, monitors, printers, laptops, stereos, cell phones, etc.

Also bring household batteries and aluminum cans for recycling.

Friday, June 1 and Saturday, June 2 from 11 a.m. - 4 p.m.

Because it costs to recycle and transport these items to the recyclers we will be charging $.25/lb. or up to $10/truck load.

Electronic waste will be collected in the parking lot between Kawerak and the Methodist Church.

Mining regulators and biologists team up to protect subsistence fishing

By Sandra L. Medearis

Several agencies are preparing rules to protect fish during the mining season. If approved, the state Dept. of Natural Resources will add the regulations to new mining permits and send the information as an add-on to already approved existing Subsistence and commercial fishers have attended meetings of official City of Nome and state panels responding to an expected increase in the number of mining rigs on the waters off Nome beaches this summer season to voice concern for fish and fishing equipment.

Those who deal with mining, water safety and fishery issues expect Nome's beaches, lease tracts and recreational mining areas to teem with activity beginning next month. A barge load of equipment bringing 500 tons comprising the annual freight for Gold Prospectors of America Association, Port of Nome harbor dredging equipment, placer mining equipment for upland operations, also includes 48 tons of suction dredge and other offshore mining equipment, according to Harbormaster Joy Baker who has the itemized manifest on her desk.

Preparations for hosting the still unknown number of gold seekers as regards to law enforcement, safety and port use have broadened to include protecting subsistence harvests that have fed residents for decades.

Last season, several fishers reported nets ridden over by dredges and instances of accidental and intentional damage. This year, "zoo" has been used by officials to describe crowded operations offshore and in the Port of Nome facility.

State Dept. of Fish and Game and state Dept. of Natural Resources have collaborated on the rules to avert conflicts between subsistence, fish habitat and mining uses.

During summer months, mid-June to mid-September, the ADF&G issues shore fish set net permits for the coastal areas of Norton Sound with exceptions, for areas of interest to fishers. Many residents of western Alaska obtain permits for fishing along the southern shores of the Seward Peninsula.

One may see the set nets measuring up to 300 feet in length with colored buoys and anchors at both ends just off shore. Rules require adjacent set nets to be 300 feet apart.

Based on information from an email from DNR, proposed stipulations to protect fishing, fish and fishing equipment—still only proposals as of Monday, according to Jim Menard, ADF&G biologist, are

Offshore mining operators using suction dredge and mechanical placer mining equipment must observe a buffer zone around the set

There must be a 300-foot separation distance from any part of a set

If an eight-inch or larger suction dredge or placer mining operation, for example, an excavator with a wash plant on a barge or vessel, create any turbidity during mining, the separation must increase to 500 feet.

If a mining operator damages a set net, stipulations require them to immediately report the damage to ADF&G at (907) 443-5167 and DNR at (907) 269-8652. Additional rules have been proposed to protect young fish at river

Mining is prohibited year around within ½ mile of any river mouth.

Additionally, for 10-inch and larger suction dredge or placer mining operations, mining within one mile of any river mouth between annual dates of June 1- July 15 is pro-

Both before and after the six week period, mining may occur between the one-mile buffer and the one-half mile buffer. The information from Kerwin J. Krause, DNR geologist/mineral property manager, via email, emphasizes that no mining is ever allowed at any time within the one-half mile buffer of any river mouth.

Multiple agencies will meet in Nome to discuss mining issues again on May 30.

Northern Bering Sea Regional Aquaculture Association seats board

By Diana Haecker

A regional aquaculture association that was formerly known as the Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association changed its name to Northern Bering Sea Regional Aquaculture Association and held elections for board members representing 15 Norton Sound and Bering Strait communities plus Nome.

In the past, there was confusion as there were two registered RAAs in the area bearing the same name of Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Aquaculture Association, NS/BS RAA for short. One is presided over by Nomeite Tim Smith, the other was presided over by Oscar Takak from Elim. Takak's entity was recognized by the Dept. of Fish and Game as the official regional aquaculture association, RAA for short. Alaska-wide regional aquaculture associations are entities that have a say in the development of salmon enhancement plans.

Officially recognized RAAs have the right to appoint three members who act as voting members on the so-called Regional Planning Team, or RPT. The Dept. of Fish and Game is allocated also three seats to complete the voting members. There are also three non-voting or ex-officio members of the RPT: Tom Sparks with BLM, Rose Fosdick with Kawerak and Tim Smith with the Nome Fishermen's Association. The RPT is charged with the development of an updated Norton Sound/Bering Strait Regional Comprehensive Salmon Plan and so far, two meetings were held in Nome to begin the task.

The election process for the newly named Northern Bering Sea Regional Aquaculture Association took place in February and March, asking city councils of the regional communities for a nomination of a representative. The city councils voted for their candidate and the person with the most votes was named the representative for the district. The runners-up were named the alternate to the seat. The region was split into six districts and the following directors were seated: Oscar Takak represents the Northeastern Norton Sound comprised of White Mountain, Golovin, Koyuk, Elim. His alternate is Roger Nassuk Jr. Troy Apatiki represents the Island District of Gambell and Savoonga. Reggie Barr represents the Bering Strait District of Wales, Teller, Diomede, Brevig Mission. Stan Anderson represents the Nome District comprised of Nome, King Island Native Community, Nome Eskimo Community, Solomon and Council. Frank Katchetag represents Eastern Norton Sound comprised of Shaktoolik and Unalakleet, his alternate is Michael Sookiayak. Milton Cheemuk represents the Southern Norton Sound of St. Michael and Stebbins, his alternate is Fredrick Pete Sr.

Oscar Takak was voted president of the Northern Bering Sea RAA. Tom Gray was appointed to fill the sport fishing seat and is the vice president. Wes Jones holds a seat reserved for a processor and is the secretary. Roy Ashenfelter, holding a seat for Kawerak, is the treasurer. Perry Mendenhall was appointed to occupy the seat for subsistence fishing and Charlie Lean holds a director's seat for NSEDC. The seat for a representative of commercial fishing had not been filled.

Charlie Lean organized the regionwide elections and was appointed to be the public point of contact for the Northern Bering Sea

Lean said that the election took place without a specific RAA name because of the confusion that had ensued in the past and that work is afoot to incorporate the Northern Bering Sea RAA. State Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development records show that an application for a name reservation under Northern Bering Sea RAA existed, but the entity is not yet registered as a corporation or nonprofit. Commissioner Campbell acknowledged the new entity as the former NS/BS RAA and that it has undergone a name change. In an April letter to Oscar Takak, Campbell affirmed that the Northern Bering Sea RAA remains the official RAA that is authorized to participate in the RPT process.

Lean said that in the future, there would be an administrator housed at Kawerak Inc. to take care of the administrative needs of the RAA.

The board of the Northern Bering Sea RAA is set to meet on August

According to a press release, the RAA is calling for nominees for the commercial fishing seat and any vacant alternate seats early this summer so that they can be seated at that

Nominees to the commercial fishing seat are voted on by Norton Sound or Port Clarence commercial salmon fishing permit holders.

Nome honors longtime ambulance volunteers

Diana Haecker

Last Friday afternoon, Nome Ambulance Department volunteers were honored for their dedication and years of service to the Nome public. Nome's Public Safety Building was decorated with balloons, the parking lot was filled with emergency services volunteers and their families and the aroma of barbequed hot dogs wafted through the warm spring air. Mayor Denise Michels was on hand to honor the volunteers and together with Vicki Erickson, she handed out the awards, plaques and pins, recognizing the selfless services that NVAD volunteers deliver 24/7.

Charlie Lean topped the list in terms of longtime dedication to the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department, having put in 31 years of volunteerism with NVAD. Mike Owens is not lagging much behind with 29 years of service spent at the organization. Owens was not present because he was on duty, flying a medevac. Karen O'Neill, NVAD medical director has been with NVAD for 22 years. John Handeland put in 21 years dedicated to NVAD. Vicki Erickson has been with the department for 19 years, Tom Vaden for 18 years and Elsie Vaden for 10 years. Wes Perkins received honors for six years of service.

Volunteers having served for one year and more were also recognized with a certificate and a pin. They included Gregory Saclamana, Keith Conger, Danielle Sylvester, Michele Sullivan, Matthew Smith, Kevin Knowlton, Scott Johnson and Ben Froehle.

Erickson reminded those present that emergency service volunteers do put in a significant amount of time and respond to calls that often come in the middle of the night

Nome's Emergency Services Coordinator Mimi Farley said that the department has currently 34 volunteers at different levels. The department welcomes new volunteers and offers volunteer opportunities at different levels.

An entry-level position would be a driver for which a CPR card is required. Emergency Trauma Technician and Emergency Medical Technicians and paramedics require a more involved level of training and certification. Farley said EMT 1,2 and 3 classes are held here in Nome on a regular basis. Ambulance volunteers sign up for eight 12-hour shifts per month.

Farley said the department is especially strapped for volunteers in the summer time when people are busy. She added that the department is hoping to get another fulltime EMT on board for this summer seaflux of people to Nome to engage in gold mining activities, both on and offshore.

Walk for Life

A crowd of nearly 100 smiling people, balloons, a rainbow of colorful flowers (courtesy of Seaside residents), and some great walking music - that was the scene on Front Street, Saturday May 12, as Kawerak Wellness held its 4th annual "Walk For Life." The walkers in Nome were definitely not alone. They were a part of an even bigger group, as walks were held all around the state from Kotzebue to Juneau. Beginning in Kotzebue, the statewide walk has grown over the years and now includes nearly 3,000 participants.

The Walk for Life sends a message of hope and celebration. As a community walking, we show support for those in need, as well as celebrating all the things that make life beautiful.

Suicide in the Bering Strait Region affects nearly everyone. However, recently we've seen a big push for suicide prevention efforts both in our region and throughout the state. Through Kawerak and in partnership with Maniilaq, the region is currently being served under the Garret Lee Smith Suicide Prevention grant. As a result of growing community and regional partnerships, this is the second consecutive GLS grant Kawerak has been awarded.

Communities and individuals around the region are also finding ways to provide local prevention efforts including Family Fun Nights, community education, story circles, or inviting youth out to camp, hunt or pick berries. Suicide prevention is something that happens every day within a community. Special training or grant funding is not needed— it's showing someone you care by sharing a skill, telling a story or speaking up when you notice someone might be having a difficult time.

It can be as simple as getting out and joining something like the "Walk for Life." As a community we need to stand together and show that suicide is not a solution for our families, communities, and region. We will celebrate the blessings that life has to offer, be the friend there to listen when needed and when we ourselves feel that life is difficult, seek our own help and healing.

Are You Healthier than a Second Grader? Part 2

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Mr. Slingsby's Nome Elementary second grade class recently sent me hand-written letters. Each letter contained a question regarding a medical problem. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

I get growing pains all the time. What's the best way to make it go away? Thank you sincerely, Andrew Nashalook

Dear Andrew,

Thank you for asking about growing pains. Nobody really knows what causes growing pains. I wish we did know because many kids experience this problem while growing up. Some people even have the problem over and over.

The pain is usually felt in the muscles of the legs. Most of the time it happens at night and goes away during the daytime. The good news is that the problem usually disappears when you grow up. In the meantime, here are a few things you can try to make the pain go away:

First, stretch your muscles every night before bed. This is the only treatment that is known to work for most children. It is important to stretch the muscles that tend to hurt. If your legs ache, stretch the legs. If your arms ache, stretch the Second, stay hydrated. This means drink plenty of water during the daytime. Avoid "pop," sugary drinks, or fruit juice.

And third, eat vegetables every day. Try to eat a vegetable of every color. Orange (carrots), green (broccoli), yellow (squash or corn), red (bell peppers or tomatoes) are vegetables with nutrients to help repair your muscles.

Finally, tell your parents if you have pain in your joints or if the growing pains occur in the daytime. Sometimes the pain is caused by an injury or a different problem that is not just growing pains.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you get rid of ear aches? Do you put ice on it? Or do you chew gum? Please tell me! Sincerely, Bode Leeper

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you stop a pesky ear ache? Sincerely, Lizzy Hahn

Dear Bode and Lizzy,

I am so glad you asked this question because so many people get earaches. Treating ear pain is tricky because there are many things that cause the pain. The first step in treating ear pain is to find out what is causing the pain; then you will know how to best make it go away. Doctors and ear specialists use a special flashlight for looking at ears called an otoscope. This helps them determine where your pain is coming from.

Sometimes the pain is from deep inside the ear way behind the eardrum. Many times a virus or bacteria attack this part of the ear. To make it feel better, the doctor will have your parents give you medicine to kill the germs and take away the pain.

Sometimes the pain comes from the outside ear canal. This happens to a lot of kids after swimming. I know some parents who use a 50:50 mixture of vinegar and rubbing alcohol to make special drops to clean the ear after swimming. If pain and swelling worsen, the doctor will prescribe you drops to kill the germs and treat the pain in the outer ear canal.

Sometimes people get pain in their ears after flying. This is because the air inside the ear wants to get out when the plane is coming down for a landing. Have you noticed how your ears want to make a "popping" noise when you are flying? Most of the time the air comes out a special tube hidden way back in your throat called a Eustachian tube. If the air cannot move out of this tube the pressure will push out on your ear drum and make it hurt. The best way to prevent this pain is to hold your nose and gently blow air back into your ears during the flight and after landing.

Tell your parents if you have ear pain that does not go away.

DOCTOR Dear Lawrence, I sprained my ankle really bad once and it's been twisting every time I run a long ways. How do I fix it? Thanks, Colin McFarland

Dear Colin,

LASKA

FAMILY

This is a great question. Did you know that a sprained ankle is one of the most common reasons a person goes to the doctor?

Ankle sprains can be very serious. Sometimes they take a long time to heal. But here are a few things you can do to make your ankle stronger before your next long run.

First, practice moving the ankle through its six major motions: up, down, right, left, twisting inward and twisting outward. This prevents the ankle from getting stiff. Some people find it helpful to draw the A-B-Cs with the foot moving the ankle through its full range of motion. You can do this exercise many times

Next, work on stretching and strengthening the ankle. Practice standing on your toes for a minute and then stand on your heels for a minute. Use your hand to pull and push against your ankle to stretch and then strengthen all the muscles that move the ankle. These exercises strengthen the ankle and, in a sense, build an internal ankle brace so your ankle will be less likely to twist while running.

Finally, you must teach your brain to trust the ankle again. A simple way to do this is to stand on one foot while doing something else like brushing your hair, dribbling a basketball, reading, or watching TV. Standing like a stork forces the brain to trust the ankle in lots of positions so it is less likely to twist again when walking, running, or playing

Tell your parents if your ankle keeps twisting after trying these exercises. Sometimes the doctor can help select a good ankle brace to wear when you are playing sports.

I am proud of you for running and hope you take good care of your ankles so you can stay active your en-

Graduation is Just the Beginning

When I was a young boy, I couldn't wait to graduate from a tricycle to a bicycle with training wheels. The training wheels provided stability and helped me to gain confidence to ride on my own. By the time I was 7, I felt I was an experienced cyclist and thought I could handle any challenge. One day, with a bit of coaxing from my older brother, I tackled the steepest, sandy hill in the neighborhood. The hill won the battle and it took a trip to the emergency room to help me recover from my perilous fall. A bloodied arm and a bruised ego made me fearful to ride the bike again. It took the care of a physician to heal the bruises, and a loving family to help me rebuild my confidence.

When the apostles were still in training with Jesus they couldn't wait to graduate to going out two by two. Jesus of course was there to provide stability and helped them to gain confidence to preach and teach on their own. By the time of the Last Supper, they felt they had the knowledge to handle any challenge. But Jesus cautioned them saying, "All of you will have your faith shaken."

The crucifixion was more devastating to the apostles, than ten trips to the emergency room after falling from a bicycle. The bloodied body of Jesus brought great fear upon the apostles. They were seized with trembling and bewilderment. Even after Jesus appeared to them, they still lived in fear that they would be persecuted. Jesus worked to rebuild their confidence and challenged them to tackle steeper hills. He gave them a mission. "Go into the whole world and proclaim the gospel to every crea-

This is the season of graduations in our community, and in distant cities for youth who have gone off to school. Youth who have studied hard and long throughout the years are eager and excited to graduate. With enthusiasm and joy, many a graduate feels experienced and confident to handle any challenge that the future might bring. And with that confidence, many mountains can be conquered.

In looking with confidence to the future, we must not forget where we have come from. We might hope that there would never be failure, pain and fear, bloodied arms and bruised egos. But wisdom teaches us that life beyond graduation will never be a life free of failure or struggle. There will be times when we may fall and abandon the teaching that has given us confidence. There will be days when we are seized with trembling and bewilderment. When we fail, the love of family and friends can help us rebuild and regain confidence.

The apostles learned from the failure of their overconfidence to place more trust in Jesus. And let us not forget that after his death and resurrection, Jesus took time to offer a little postgraduate education to his disciples. No matter how much we may learn in life, there is always room to learn more from the life and death of Jesus. God will not abandon us although we at times may feel as is the world has caved in. Trust in Jesus.

Jesus ascended to heaven but promised the coming of the Spirit. Jesus did not work alone and neither should we. My prayer is that every graduate continue to grow in the knowledge and wisdom of God.

Laney Roberta Ahkinga August 1, 1987 – May 8, 2012

Laney Roberta Ahkinga, was born on August 1, 1987, at the Norton Sound Hospital in Nome, and spent most of her too-short life on Diomede, surrounded by all her favorite cousins whom she loved so

Laney had a passion for reading

from a very early age, and often had her nose in a book. Some of her favorites were the Twilight and Harry Potter series. Her teachers remember her as being an exceptional writer, especially of poetry, and a student who was a hard worker and deep thinker. But even with this determination to always do her best, she still had a delightful and infectious smile!

Laney loved her life on Diomede. She loved to sing, draw comics, and design awesome hairstyles. She never missed dressing up for Halloween, and attended every community celebration that included activities for children. Even when she had to leave the island, Laney's heart was always in Diomede.

In 2009, Laney became very ill and was medevaced to Seattle where she was diagnosed with Primary Pulmonary Hypertension and Takayasu Arteritis. Laney and her mom learned that these conditions were incurable, and that the only hope was to try and control it through medication. Although she was physically weakened by her condition, Laney wished to continue living in Diomede as long as possible, so she could spend lots of precious time playing with her little cousins.

In 2010, she had to move to Nome, to be closer to the hospital due to her delicate health. She missed her aunties and many cousins on Diomede, but recognized that her health problems made it very difficult to continue living on Diomede.

Laney kept in particularly close contact with her favorite cousin, Becca, while Becca attended high school at Mt. Edgecumbe, in Sitka. They spent lots of time together on the internet reviewing poetry and songs Laney had written, exchanging pictures, and sharing movie previews and new songs.

Laney's life was brief, and revolved mostly around the big family she adored, but she still had many special dreams and gifts. Her heart was so large and filled with goodness. While she was loved by many, Laney is especially missed by her Mom, who was also her best friend, and there for her throughout her illness. Laney will never be forgotten, and her smile will always warm our hearts. She will be remembered as the little girl and beautiful young woman who always took the time to listen, to comfort and to love.

Laney is survived by her parents Opik Ahkinga of Nome and John Ahkvaluk of Diomede, grandparents Orville and Dora Ahkinga, Peter and Isabell Ahkvaluk of Nome and her aunts and uncles and numerous cousins from Diomede, Wales and Nome.

Laney is preceded in death by her great-grandparents Jacob Catherine Ahkinga, James and Annie Iyapana, her aunt Roberta Ahkinga, uncle Christopher Ahkinga, cousins Sonja Ozenna, Timothy Kazingnuk, Jacob and Brandon Kakaruk, Elijah Okpealuk, James Jacob Ahkinga and her extended Ahkinga family.

Jacqueline Lee Perry

Jacqueline Lee Perry (Inupiaq name Aghmoya), 39, known to her family and friends as Jackie, died May 18 in Anchorage.

Jackie was born June 17, 1972 in Mt. Clemens, Michigan to Jack Appolloni and Eileen Norbert. Soon after, the family moved back to Alaska where Jackie grew up and called Anchorage home. For numerous years, Jackie worked in telecommunications as a financial analyst.

Jackie raised her two wonderful children, Ashley and Zachery, with love and kindness. With Ashley, Jackie encouraged her love of snowboarding and other sports. She was a dedicated and proud hockey mom for Zachery. Jackie always told her children how much she loved and cared for them.

Jackie enjoyed the outdoors. She often fished on float trips with her family on the Kenai, Gulkana and Willow rivers. She also enjoyed hiking and biking on the numerous trails in south central Alaska.

Jackie loved family gatherings and especially barbeques. Her laugh and wonderful attitude was infectious. Jackie was witty and always loved to banter with family and friends. She was the "Ray of Sunshine" at any gathering.

Jackie will always be remembered as a loving mother, daughter, sister, and loyal friend. Our beloved Jackie will be greatly missed and may she find the peace she deserves.

Jackie is survived by her daughter and son, Ashley and Zachery Perry; her father Jack Appolloni and his wife Kathy: her mother Eileen Norbert; her brothers Victor Appolloni and Peter Jorgensen; her sister and brother-in-law Angela and John Lowe; her sister Gina Appolloni; her partner Charles Hudson; numerous nieces, nephews, and extended family members.

Folks who would like to make a donation in lieu of flowers, the family suggests donations go to the local Salvation Army.

Funeral Mass will be held at 2 p.m. Thursday May 24, at St. Patrick Catholic Church, 2111 Muldoon Road in Anchorage. Officiating will be Fr. Scott Medlock. A reception will immediately follow the services in the parish hall.

Arrangements were cared for by the Anchorage Funeral Home and Crematory. Jackie's obituary and online guestbook may be visited at www.AlaskanFuneral.com.

Hunters report seeing sick seals during spring hunt

Ry Diana Haecker

While scientists still investigate the mysterious seal disease that plagues ice seals, regional hunters have reported over 20 sick seals showing either hair loss, open skin sores or unusually approachable behavior during this spring hunting season. Since last summer, all four species of ice seals turned up in unusual numbers showing symptoms of the disease throughout western and northern Alaska.

In December, an unusual mortality event was declared, which was supposed to initiate a focused federal scientific investigation into the cause and nature of the disease. The investigation is coordinated by the National Marine Fisheries Service under the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The cause of the disease, investigators say, remains a mystery. Testing, so far, has been negative for known bacteria and viruses, foreign animal diseases and a preliminary report ruled out radiation exposure.

Since the beginning of this year, hunters in the region have reported more seals showing hair loss and skin sores. One sub-adult ringed seal was caught in January near Nome that showed hair loss from its chest to the stomach. It was harvested but not sent in. The hunter shot it, saw it was sick and didn't bring it home, but reported it. In February and in March there were no diseased seals reported in the Norton Sound and Bering Strait region.

In April, however, the office of Gay Sheffield with the Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory program started getting more reports of sick seals. Sheffield reports that a hunter from White Mountain observed 15 bearded seals showing hair loss over a time period of 10 days. The man was hunting between Topkok and Rocky Point, but didn't shoot the hairless seals. Two bearded seals were harvested in White Mountain. Sheffield said that one showed hair loss, the other hair loss and skin sores.

Also in April, one ringed seal showing partial hair loss was seen on the sea ice near Sledge Island. The hunter didn't take the animal, but observed blood around its breathing hole. In late April, an adult seal was shot out on the sea ice near Nome. It showed severe hair loss and its carcass was sent to North Slope Borough wildlife biologist and veterinarian Raphaela Stimmelmayr for a necropsy.

Sheffield further reports that in May, an adult bearded seal was harvested near Safety. It showed old sores, no hair and behaved lethargic.

Unalakleet hunters called in three sick ringed seals that showed hair loss. One of the three seals was an unusual case as it had a good coat, but showed a bloody patch on its back, where hair came off. The carcass was sent in for a necropsy, but the veterinarian wasn't convinced that this seal had the same symptoms as the diseased animals show.

As for walruses, a skinny walrus with sores on its head and flippers and a large bear scratch was harvested near the Southside of St. Lawrence Island. The hunters sent in a large chunk of the walrus' skin, but the investigating veterinarian determined that the walrus suffered from trauma, not the mystery disease. Also, in Chefornak, hunters shot a large adult walrus bull and discovered a big open sore under its armpit. The necropsy revealed that the sore came from a massive injury and wasn't connected to the disease that seems to plague the seals.

Joel Garlich-Miller with the federal Fish and Wildlife Service, the agency charged with the management of walrus, said that so far, no walruses have been reported showing signs of the disease in the Bering Strait region. Walruses were included in the UME investigation because there were a few animals spotted at their haulout site in northern Alaska with unusual skin lesions. As the spring walrus hunt is in full swing in St. Lawrence Island and Garlich-Miller said that he has so far not received reports of disease-stricken walrus. Garlich-Miller reiterated that testing for known virus and bacterial diseases came back negative. Scientists hypothesize that something interrupted last year's molt. Molting is triggered by a hormone, which in turn responds to environmental cues and so researchers are beginning to cast their net wider by looking at data that could yield a clue why the seals didn't grow a new coat. Sick seals appeared throughout a wide geographical area: From Canada, North and Northwestern Alaska all the way south to Yakutat, Russia and Japan. With that in mind, oceanographers are looking for a large-scale abnormality that occurred in the ocean during the molting season last year.

Garlich-Miller and Sheffield agree that there are a lot of healthy animals, both seals and walruses.

"I think it's also a good sign that we are seeing these hairless seals still alive after surviving a tough winter," Sheffield said.

Garlich-Miller said that so far, there is no evidence of people getting sick from eating or handling diseased seals or walrus. But since there are plenty of healthy seals and walrus around, Garlich-Miller suggests as a precaution to not eat the diseased animals, to cook the meat thoroughly and to safely handle the meat.

Although hair loss and skin sores have been reported in several walruses and polar bears last fall in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, Sheffield noted that there were no such reports from the Bering Strait region. "Thanks to our coastal communities for their vigilance and extraordinary efforts to provide reports as well as sending out the occasional carcass for testing," Sheffield added.

Sheffield asks hunters to call in animals that show symptoms. She encourages hunters to take multiple photos of the animal and close-ups. To report what they see to the following offices: NMFS Alaska marine mammal stranding hotline 1-877-925-7773. Barrow, Wainwright: North Slope Borough Division of Wildlife Management (907) 852-0350; Nome: Gay Sheffield, Marine Advisory Program/UAF-Northwest Campus at (907) 443-2397. If a sick seal is reported and sent to Nome, Sheffield will send it out for a thorough necropsy and further testing.

SEAL UPDATE: May 2012

To date this spring, reports of over 20 bearded and ringed seals with either, or a combination of, hair loss, skin sores, and/or approachable have been received from the Bering Strait region. The cause is still unknown. To understand if seals are healing or still sick – we need your input. Coastal communities should remain vigilant.

PLEASE REPORT UNUSUAL SEALS!

If you find an unusual seal in the Bering Strait region, contact:

- Eskimo Walrus Commission: 1-877-277-4392 (Nome)
- Gay Sheffield: 1-800-478-2202 or 443-2397 (MAP, Nome)
- NMFS (24 hr): 1-877-925-7773 (Marine Mammal Stranding Network)

SAFE HANDLING

It is recommended that hunters rely on their customary and traditional methods regarding handling and/or salvage of unusual animals.

AuruMar conducts offshore gold leases feasibility study

By Diana Haecker

The South African joint venture that landed 26 large tracts during last September's Dept. of Natural Resources' offshore gold lease sale is planning to conduct environmental baseline studies, geophysical studies and to drill core samples first before deploying any mining apparatus into waters off Nome, company officials told Nomeites during a public hearing at Old St. Joe's Hall last week. AuruMar (Pty) Ltd., equally owned by the world's third largest gold producer AngloGold Ashanti and the largest diamond miner De-Beers, has formed an Alaska subsidiary named AuruMar Alaska, Inc. which spent $5.5 million on the 26 tracts in the DNR offshore gold lease sale last year. They took the lion's share of large tract leases and secured rights to go for the underwater gold from east of the Nome River to west of Cripple River, totaling an area of almost 17,000 acres.

In a meeting at Old St. Joe's Hall, a thin crowd of a dozen Nomeites showed up to hear AuruMar's plans and ask some questions. AuruMar Pty General Manager Gary van Eck and AuruMar Pty geologist Urban Burger were flown in from the company's headquarters in Cape Town, South Africa for the meet and greet. They, plus a team of hired consultants for environmental and permitting work, led through the presentation.

The long and short of the meeting was that AuruMar hopes to develop the leases into a large scale mining operation over the next four or five years, but the next two summers will be spent to conduct environmental studies, geophysical surveys and core drilling to see if the resource warrants the effort. "We are following a structured process," assured van Eck. In 2014, when results of the studies have been analyzed, Auru-Mar Alaska will make the decision whether to proceed or not. Plans for 2012

Urban Burger, geologist, laid out the timeline for activities on Auru-Mar leases this summer. From the beginning of June until mid-June, divers with the University of Alaska

ence will examine seafloor conditions of areas that were dredged by the BIMA, of recently suction dredged and undisturbed areas in areas up to 65 feet deep.

Research professor Stephen Jewett with the Înstitute of Marine Science of the University of Alaska Fairbanks and Lee Ann Gardener with RWJ Consulting were on the environmental team that conducted environmental studies for WestGold and its BIMA operation from 1986 to 1991. AuruMar has hired them on as environmental consultants and their plan is to begin diving and collecting data in early June to establish a pre-mining baseline.

NJUS to break ground for wind generators this fall

By Sandra L. Medearis

Motorists cruising the Nome-Teller Road in fall of 2013 and looking up to the left past the high school will see two new giant wind turbines on Banner Peak standing tall over the existing 18 turbines. The turbines, standing 246 feet tall, could save 500,000 gallons of fuel per Nome Joint Utility System has received $4 million in a process of competitive applications for the project through Alaska Energy Authority. The utility is in negotiation with Bering Straits Development Co. for a land agreement to gain right of entry to place the turbines in the existing wind farm.

John K. Handeland, utility manager, told the NJUS board at its May 15 meeting that plans are in place for the foundation work for the 900 kW turbines that would get underway this winter. He expects the behemoth windmills to arrive on the first barge next season and to be standing midsummer 2013.

NJUS now buys power under contract with BSDC. Using the wind-generated power put NJUS finances around $4,200 to the good so

Nome remembers fallen military

By Diana Haecker The sun shone bright on Nome's Memorial Day parade as patriots led Nome's military veterans marched from the Post Office along Front Street, Bering Street, Seppala Drive to the cemetery and then to Belmont Point.

A cold wind however swept inland from the open sea, making the red-white and blue flags dance and flutter. People stood at the side of the roads, waving flags as the procession went by, while some decided to join in and walk all the way to the Nome cemetery. Once there, VFW Nome chaplain Aaron Iworrigan said the opening prayer and Jenny Shield sang the National Anthem.

Commander of the Nome VFW post Jake Kenick held a speech reminding folks that Memorial Day is not about picnics and parades, but about remembering those who sacrificed their lives in defense of the American Way of Life and American values of God, country and family. He added that 6,400 Americans soldiers died in the conflicts in Iraq, most of them under 25 years old, reminding the rest of the nation to take care of those families who lost a loved one, and to help those who come home disabled or wounded.

City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels read Governor Sean Parnell's proclamation of honoring Memorial Day. Theresa Kenick, president of the American Legion Auxiliary spoke of the tradition of the paper poppies made by disabled veterans to honor the fallen, never to be forgotten.

Peggy Darling, president of the Ladies Auxiliary for the VFW, took to the podium welcoming those present to "a celebration of life" of the fallen soldiers. She said that Memorial Day takes the private suffering of a family who has lost a member to war, public. "Thanks for letting us today share your burden that you carry daily as we recognize the sacrifice you have made," Darling said. She also recognized the soldiers missing in action, the prisoners of war and the disabled veterans, whose lives have changed forever.

While the ceremony at the cemetery honored the fallen on land, the procession continued on to Belmont Point, where pastor Julie Elmore Yoder led through prayer and World War II veteran Robert Scott tossed a wreath out to sea for those who lost their lives at sea. Colleen Johnson with her daughters Meagan and Kaitlyn set free three white, red and blue balloons to honor the airmen lost in battle.

Dear Editor:

The rights of spring are upon us: geese are flying in, the ice is flowing out, NJUS is laying pipe, and Mary Reader is filling up bags of trash on Center Creek Road. Sometimes she's joined by her family and friends, but she sure goes out of her way to make the drive into town pretty, even now that she doesn't have to make it everyday. To everyone taking their part to spruce up Nome, thank you.

Ben Froehle Nome, AK

Dear Editor:

It is springtime, school is out and lots of children and young adults are out on the streets on bicycles. As I drive to the Public Safety Building to attend EMT 2 classes and study for recertification as an EMT, I see lots of kids playing behind the Recreational Center on the bicycle/skateboard pad. The pad has plywood jumps and the foundation is made of concrete. Not ONE single time have I seen anyone wearing a helmet. It takes very little impact to the head from a concrete surface or the ground for that matter to cause swelling of the brain and major problems that can not be treated in Nome.

Parents and Community members we need to be reminding our children and others to wear helmets when they are riding on their bicycles, ATVs and especially when using the skateboard area behind the Recreational Center. It is a proven fact that helmets do save lives, so lets encourage our family members to wear them. Have a great summer.

Thank you Wes Perkins Training Officer Nome Volunteer Ambulance Dept.

When foraging it is submerged three to four times as much as it is on top of the water.

Volunteerism Alive and Well

A recent ceremony in Nome honored men and women who give their time and skill to our community to make Nome a better place. Often these folks are unseen and unsung heroes. The Volunteer Ambulance Department and the Volunteer Fire Department Firefighters, Search and Rescue volunteers and Mets take many hours of training and continuing education to hone their skills. They make themselves available at late hours and put in hours of unpaid time to help their fellow Nomeites

It is the spirit of volunteerism that makes us a great town. We have folks who do not hesitate to roll up their sleeves and get to work. We have folks who support the Clean-up campaigns, volunteer at their churches, help out at schools and at various art and talent show functions. Nomeites do take pride in their community and are generous with their time.

The spirit of volunteerism makes us special. When we see one of our friends, family or neighbors giving their time to the town we should not hesitate to give them an attaboy and thank them for doing their part to make Nome a good place to live. - N.L.M.-

Kotzebue Representative Reggie Joule not seeking re-election

By Diana Haecker

After 16 years serving House District 40 in the House of Representatives, Reggie Joule is not running for re-election again this year. Joule is a Kotzebue Democrat who has been representing a large district encompassing Shishmaref, Kotzebue, the Northwest Artic Borough and North Slope Boroughs for the last eight terms. Joule said in a statement that the decision came after consulting long and hard with his family. Joule made the announcement to allow other candidates to file their candidacy to represent the district. The filing deadline is June 1.

Joule said that his role in the Alaska Legislature was that of a bridge builder. "My time as a legislator has been used to increase the levels of understanding between urban and rural Alaska," Joule said. Joule sits on the House Finance Committee, the House Special Committee on Economic Development, Trade and Tourism and is a member of the House Majority Caucus. He also served as the co-chair of the Northern Waters Task Force. "The foundation we laid with the Northern Waters Task Force and the creation of the Arctic Policy Commission this past session will be a hallmark of success for the future of Alaska and will move Alaska forward," Joule said. "I look forward to see how our state continues to build on this foundation as I work on other opportunities and challenges closer to home."

Joule will finish serving his eighth term until the next Legislature convenes again in January 2013.

• AuruMar offshore gold lease feasibility continued from page I towed behind large ships that fire off In all, van Eck said t

They also started red king crab sampling in April together with local Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologists to examine crab for trace metals. The sampling will be continued as the divers look for juvenile king crabs in deeper waters. The diving team will dive off two vessels leased from local fisherman Adem Boeckman

The scope of the environmental studies will be sampling the seafloor for plants, sediment trace metals, grain sizes, and to side scan sonar surveys. Those side scans are to map surface sediments, Burger said. So, what's the strength and timing of those sonar surveys? came a question from the audience. Burger couldn't give a definite answer, but said that the sonar will be audible in the water. In an email exchange with van Eck after the meeting, he clarified, "We do not expect them to have any negative effects. The higher pressure frequencies are above the range of human hearing, and previous studies in New Zealand and South Africa have shown there to not be any adverse effect on marine life. In addition, we will use soft starts, i.e. commencing work with low pressure pulses, eventually building up to operating sound pressures, giving any marine mammals an opportunity to vacate the immediate area," van Eck wrote. He added that the company will deploy marine mammal observers, and will cease operations if any marine mammals are observed within a defined radius of the vessel.

"Our survey plan will be displayed at a prominent location in Nome, and we intend to remain clear of divers. The upcoming tests in Seattle and Nome will determine the recommended exclusion distances,' van Eck said. Sonar scans are also employed by the oil and gas industry to scan the sea floor by using sound waves to produce acoustic images. The industry uses air guns underwater sound explosions. However, Burger says, the sonar they'll be using is nothing like the air guns used by the oil and gas industry.

From the end of June until mid-October, AuruMar plans to conduct geophysical surveys. A company based in Seattle, C&C Technologies is going to do the work, bringing to Nome two vessels, the 32-ft long Quicksilver and the 60-ft long Thunder. The Thunder is going to tow equipment to collect the side-scan sonar data. The geophysical surveys are planned to cover an area from west of the Cripple River to east of the Nome River, about 20 miles in length and two miles out to sea.

The sample core drilling is set to begin in August and will last for 40 days into September. The contractor is Denali Drilling and they plan on punching 350 holes into the sea floor, each 6 inches in diameter and 16 feet long. Burger described the samples looking like a huge "sausage of dirt" that will be geologically logged and examined to determine the gold content. A 150-ft. long landing craft with a drill rig plus a second support boat is going to arrive in Nome to perform the sample drill

In all, van Eck said that this summer, approximately 36 AuruMar and contractor personnel will be setting up shop in Nome at various times. Despite having a hard time to find accommodations for their employees, the company did manage to find suitable housing situations for their

Charlie Lean, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. fishery biologist, said that he was happy that they put on a public meeting, although the meeting was not well publicized. "I am encouraged by their scientific approach to prospecting," Lean said. His main concerns were mining operations disturbing not only the shallow layers of the ocean floor but digging through bedrock and thus releasing toxic trace metals into the fragile marine environment. "I'm surprised to hear that you don't plan to dig deeper than 16 feet," Lean said. AuruMar's geologist Urban Burger answered that according to their data, much of the gold sits on the surface seafloor, above bedrock.

AuruMar has received a Nationwide permit from the Army Corps of Engineers and applied for a multiyear Alaska Placer Mining Application with DNR.

PLAN FIRST, MINE LATER - AuruMar (Pty) Ltd. General Manager Gary van Eck from South Africa explained the company's exploration plans to the Nome public on May 23.

Rasmussen's Music Mart closes its doors

By Diana Haecker

The clutter in the store is overwhelming. It takes the eye a few minutes to get used to the various different merchandise items that range from homemade art to plastic iewelry, fireworks and exquisite Native art to a mount of "the rare fur-bearing trout." Toys, mushing mittens, Nome Kennel Club and Iditarod Trail Committee memorabilia, music cassette tapes, books, maps, tools, china ware, you name it, it's there. But not for long.

Leo Rasmussen, standing in the midst of his store that has been his and wife Erna's since the mid 1970s, has decided to call it quits. "I guess we've had a going-out-of-business sale for the past five years," Rasmussen said. Why? Rasmussen quotes unaffordably high fuel and energy costs to keep the store heated and the lights on, plus the lack of patrons walking through the door and leaving cash in the till. But the real impetus for the grand final sale now comes as the Museum and Library commission have looked favorably on Rasmussen's bid to sell off the lot between Federal Way and Steadman Ave. as the site for the new Richard Foster building to house the city's Carry M. McLain Memorial Museum and Kegoayah Kozga Library.

According to Rasmussen, the Music Mart began its long history with Frank and Louise Richardson who opened the store in 1965. Back then it was located on Front Street, where today the Anchor Bar sits. "It started out as a music store with LPs and later cassette tapes for sale," recounts Rasmussen. The business was doing all right, and the owners could make a living. Leo and Erna Rasmussen then took over the store as managers in 1970 and five years later bought the business. They moved it into what used to be the old Glue Pot, across the street. Another move into the Old Federal building followed and in 1978, the pair bought the property on Federal Way and moved the business to its current location. The back part of the building, Rasmussen points out, is the old Episcopalian Church that used to be on 4th Avenue and Steadman. "We found paper clippings of its dedication in 1900 posted on the window sills," Rasmussen remembered. The rest of the building has been added on as the need for more room for yet more merchandise arose.

Rasmussen said that they ran their business by never financing their merchandise. "We always paid cash for it," he said. Pointing at rows and rows of paintings of flowers and abstract art, Rasmussen said that just like van Gogh, his sister was sponsored by her brother who bought most of her paintings so that she could indulge her artistic pursuit.

Rasmussen said that music was the initial specialty and at one point, they carried more than 4,000 titles as LPs or cassettes. But then he also dealt with groceries and people placed dry goods orders through the music mart that arrived via barge in Nome. "We had at one point ten container vans loaded with groceries and dog food coming into Nome," Rasmussen said. "Back then people still had storage space and stored food, unlike today.'

Then came the fat years. When Alaska experienced the fabled oncein-a-lifetime economic boom with the building of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Nomeites also felt the money shot in the arm. "We never have seen volumes of business like this - not before and not after," recalled Rasmussen. He couldn't keep ordering merchandise fast enough, but when the modern marvel of the pipeline was finished, the boom went bust.

"In 1987, I almost walked to the bank and handed over the keys,' Rasmussen said. He just couldn't make enough money to keep the business afloat. The store somehow survived until now, although times were tough. Now, Rasmussen said, people never come to his store in the first place to look for things. "If they

Supreme court OK's redistricting plan

After a lengthy battle between courts and the Alaska Redistricting Board charged with drawing up a new redistricting map that satisfies state and federal requirements, the Alaska Supreme Court voted 3-2 to approve an amended redistricting map in time for the political candidate's filing deadline on June 1.

The plan under which elections are going to be held is the one adopted by the board in April. The court rejected the Redistricting Board's reconfiguration of the southeast Alaska districts from May 15. The court order says that while the districts seem to comply with state requirements, there is the risk that the US Department of Justice would decline to pre-clear them under the Voting Rights Act.

This, in turn, could wreak havoc with the elections, as the notice from the DoJ would come so late in the 2012 election as to disrupt the election process. The current plan is not much different from the amended plan, but shows a few differences. The district for the Aleutian Chain is not split up anymore and the Fairbanks district is divided in such a fashion that the two senators. Joe Thomas and Joe Paskvan, don't have to run against each other. District 39 is the geographically largest district that includes Nome, the Bering Strait, Norton Sound, St. Lawrence Island and stretches all the way to the Canadian border in the east, as far as Eagle and as far south as Mc-Carthy. The district was not subject to recent changes.

The Alaska Redistricting Board on Friday submitted to the U.S. Department of Justice a request for preclearance of the amended plan. Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act requires that certain states - including Alaska - submit changes to their redistricting plans for pre-clearance from the DoJ to ensure that the proposed changes are free from discriminatory purpose and will not result in retrogression in the position of racial minorities with respect to their exercise of the electoral franchise. The DoJ has 60 days to evaluate the new plan and to make a decision. Alaskans can comment on the plan. The Alaska Redistricting Board encourages citizens to comment in writing as soon as possible and mail their comments to the Chief, Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, United States Department of Justice, Room 7254-NWB, 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW Washington, D.C. 20530.

TESTING THE WATERS—Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's new tender vessel, the T/V Daniel D. Takak, was christened at a ceremony May 15 in Port Townsend, Wash. The vessel's namesake, longtime NSEDC tender boat captain Dan Takak, was on hand for the ceremony along with members of NSEDC's Executive Committee. Starting this summer, the T/V Daniel D. Takak will primarily serve the salmon fisheries near Golovin, Elim and Koyuk. The 74' by 23' vessel features refrigerated seawater tanks capable of holding 75,000 pounds of fish and can accommodate two 40' freight containers when the RSW tanks are not onboard. Built to last, NSEDC believes the T/V Daniel D. Takak will serve the residents of Norton Sound as long and well as the captain for whom it is named.

Kotzebue hunter discovers more sick seals, Russians issue report on their observations of the disease

Spring hunting turned up more seals that show signs of the mystery disease which is under a federal Unusual Mortality Event investigation. According to observers in Alaska, Canada and Japan the disease has afflicted all four species of ice seals and although hunters report a lot of healthy seals, more reports trickle in of seals that are disease-stricken.

A new twist to the evolving story is that a hunter in Kotzebue harvested seals that looked fine on the outside, but then showed signs of the illness when being butchered. Roswell Schaefer recently harvested four seals between Cape Blossom and Kotzebue. Two of them were sick. In an email to the Nome Nugget, Schaefer wrote that he and his wife began to butcher the animal when they found sores between skin and blubber. "I also noticed that each of these seals have lung disease of some sort," Schaefer wrote. "A large female I shot had one lung with white spots in it, a young female had severe lung disease and had only about a half inch of fat."

Schaefer said he landed six seals in a hunt in February. "All the seals looked OK except for white spots on one younger female," he wrote.

"What was different about this hunt was the fact that when we hunted previously in this area we landed more males than females. But this hunt we landed all females. The seals I landed lately, five are showing signs of being sick. Their outward appearance seemed good except for one very skinny young female. The sick ones had white spots throughout their lungs and had sores between the blubber and the skin. I did not notice any bleeding or cuts on the surface. One female my wife and I worked on this weekend, a natchiq, was very fat and looked great until my wife cut between the blubber and skin. There were sores about two inches in diameter and about 1/4 inch thick. They had pus in these sores and the sores made lesions in the skin area, like the animal was shot next to the skin. Some have brown blubber in the sore areas. Last fall I shot one young bearded seal with no hair and saw another one left on the ice by a hunter who knew this was a sick one," wrote Schaefer.

Schaefer also wrote that he noticed a few seal moms without their pups.

"The young ones may have been taken by red foxes but no sign of - only dens," he wrote. Schaefer wrote that in the past years, he had caught only one seal without hair, but it did appear healthy. "The white spots in the lungs is something I had not noticed before," wrote Schaefer.

While the UME investigation still continues, no new insights have come forth from the investigating ex-

However, a report from the Russian Chukotka branch of Pacific Science and Research Fishery Center that recently has been translated into English, revealing that diseased seals-albeit in unconfirmed numbers- have been seen in Russia as well. "In summer-autumn 2011, in the absence of ice in the waters of the Chukchi and Bering seas adjacent to the coast of the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug, there was an outbreak of diseases among ringed seals," says the report. "External symptoms of epizootics were expressed by such signs as mass exit of seals onto the shore, their apathetic behavior, high mortality levels and on individual animals — partial loss of hair, skin damages, mostly on their hind flippers, as well as ulcers and inflamed areas around the eyes and nose.

The Russians haven't found the disease in the other species of ice seals. "We detected 176 ringed seals on the coast, of which 13 had obvious signs of disease," the report says. "In addition, 65 deaths of ringed seals were recorded. These numbers are relative and can not [sic] be an estimate of the number of sick and dead animals." The Russians also have not found the cause of the dis-

The report says that maybe the disease may not be an epidemic but rather a "development of secondary infections in the spots of physical damage on the skin of seals. It is possible that these infections and injuries have different origins. " But the authors also say that if it continues and expands in 2012, it can dramatically reduce the number of ringed seals in the Chukchi and Bering seas. "It will have a negative impact on both indigenous people for whom hunting ringed seal is an important part of the traditional economy, and on such rare species as the polar bear. Ringed seals are the principal feeding base for polar bears. Their survival may be threatened not only by reducing the number of seals, but by direct infection from hunting and eating diseased seals,"

The authors suggest to monitor the disease by counting the seals, by inspecting each diseased seal and accurately recording all possible symptoms of the disease. Among other things the authors also stress to raise awareness among the indigenous hunters and coastal villages and organize collection of survey data on seals spotted on the coast, including sick and dead animals. They also suggest to partner up with institutes and laboratories for microbiological analysis of collected samples, as well as to determine pollutants and radiation content.

The report brought up the hypothesis that the outbreak may be associated with radioactive emissions from the explosion of the nuclear reactor at Fukushima last year. Tests by the University of Alaska showed preliminary results that did not support that hypothesis. But the Russian report states, "However, in our opinion, we can not [sic] exclude neither effects of radiation on the seal, nor a virus or other infectious agent, which could have rapidly mutated and therefore was not identified by the

Anthony A. Andrews School in Saint Michael held their high school graduation ceremony on May 12, 2012. The school staff and members of the community gathered to witness 11 students receive their high school diplomas. The ceremony featured guest speakers from both the Bering Strait School District and Alaska Department of Education.

The students were fortunate enough to meet and listen to a message from Mike Hanley, the Alaska Commissioner of Education and Early Development. The ceremony concluded with a video montage put together by the Class of 2012 that detailed their lives through pictures and inspirational quotes. The Saint Michael community and school staff are extremely proud of the graduating class. Congratulations to all of you and best of luck in the future!

Dear Graduates,

Well, this is it. Graduation is here and youllre ready to begin lifels journey. I know you have lots of mixed feelings. That the weird thing about most of lifels big moments - very rarely do they consist of one emotion. But, that SOK. It helps to make the good times more precious and the not so good times bearable.

Inve spent a lot of time trying to figure out what advice I could pass along. That is one of the hard parts about being a parent: trying to decide what should be said and what should be left for you to find out. Some people go through their whole lives without ever giving them any thought which explains why, at my age, I still don't have any answers.

There are 6 questions; who, what, when, where, why and how.

How? This will carry you through when the questions come along.

Who? Take the time to discover who you are and be your own person. Strive to be honest, respectful and happy. When you are at peace with yourself everything will fall into place. Always remember that you are not alone. You have your family and friends. For myself, I always want a guardian angel and God.

What? What will I do today? What is my passion? Discover what it is that burns inside you, and it will keep you going. Then, nurture it. Do it because that swhat you love to do. You are dealing with so many things and changes you don to know which end is up. Then there is criticism. Even when it is deserved, it stings like a bee. If someone criticizes you, forgive. It will set you free and remove the dread from you. It gives you back your laugh. To forgive when you re hurt is pure magic. These are the most difficult periods of your life right now.

When? As hard as it may be, remember to take the time to rest and enjoy the miracle of each new day. With practice you will learn the pleasure of doing some things now, and to sometimes wait to plan for other things.

Where? You will always have the answer with you if you keep your home in your heart and take it to whatever you call home. Be an active part of your community and remember that the simplest act of kindness can make an enormous difference. You could even change the world around you.

Why? Never stop asking this one. It sthe one that will keep you growing. Let it challenge you when you feel confused. Always think positive. Negative thoughts bring, or get, you in unpleasant problems. If you depend on your parents too much, sometimes you can think for yourself. Prayer: Gracious and Loving Lord we give you thanks for this gathering. I pray especially for those who are graduating; Lillian, Tammy, Ben, Dora, Elsie and Aaka. As they leave home and school work behind, and move into a new stage of life, be their guide.

Give them the true wisdom of your Holy Spirit that they may serve you in whatever field you call them into; jobs, family life or further education. Help them to be aware of your presence and forgive them when their thoughts are distracted and their heart is far from you. We all take different paths in life, but no matter where we are you are with us. Thank you for your unconditional love and mercy. Please keep us always in your loving hands. Bless each and everyone of us for our very breath comes from you. We honor your precious name. Amen

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Mr. Slingsby's Nome Elementary second grade class recently sent me hand-written letters. Each letter contained a question regarding a medical problem. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Lawrence.

I broke my collarbone once. It hurts sometimes.

Will it ever get better? Sincerely, Thank you. Grace Okleasik.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

I broke my femur once. How does a broken bone heal? Thanks Doctor Lawrence. Sincerely, Daniel Buffas

Dear Grace and Daniel,

Thank you for the excellent questions about broken bones. Did you know you have 206 bones in your body? Most people will break at least one of these bones sometime in their lifetime. The good news is that your body has the amazing ability to fix almost any broken bone. This takes keeping the bone straight and giving your body the nutrients to rebuild the broken pieces.

Doctors put broken bones in a cast to keep them straight. Sometimes they even use a metal rod or metal plates to hold bones together. As long as the pieces of bone can touch each other, they will grow back together.

Your body needs lots of good nutrients to fix the bone and make it stronger. Vitamin D and calcium are the most important for bone healing. You get these nutrients by eating good food like salmon and drinking

Sometimes a bone will be sensitive after it has healed. This is normal and will go away in time. You may need to see the doctor if the pain is bad enough to prevent you from playing, running, or climbing.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

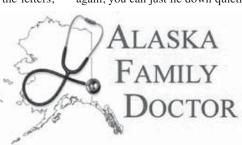

I got the wind knocked out of me once. What does that mean? Sincerely, Katie Smith

Dear Katie,

Getting the wind knocked out of you is no fun. I fell out of a tree once and got the wind knocked out of me when I landed on my back. I could hardly breathe for a few minutes. It was scary. I hope your injury was not too bad.

Getting the wind knocked out of you is actually a muscle cramp of the diaphragm. The diaphragm is a large flat muscle that divides your lungs from your stomach. Normally it moves up and down to help you breathe. The reason it is hard to breathe or even speak after getting the wind knocked out of you is that the diaphragm cannot move. It gets stuck. But the diaphragm will relax again and start working after a few minutes. So if this happens to you again, you can just lie down quietly for about two minutes. Do not be scared. Your diaphragm will soon relax, and you can start playing again.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you get rid of a stuffy nose and a headache? Sincerely, Raina McRae

I am glad you asked about how to get rid of a stuffy nose. Doctors call this problem "nasal congestion," and there are many causes. In general if your nose is full it means your body is trying to protect you from something. Sometimes the problem is an infection, like a virus. Other times it is just too much dust or pollen in

The key to un-stuffing the nose is to get it to drain. You want the nose to be runny. Your nose makes a sticky fluid called mucus. The mucus catches things like dust and pollen and tries to drain them out of vour nose. But the mucus can become very thick, especially during an infection, and can be hard to drain. The plugged passages in your nose can cause the headache.

The best way to get your nose to drain is to drink plenty of water. Your nose will use the extra water to drain the mucus, and the extra water often makes the headache go away. Some people also breathe the steam from a hot shower for a few minutes. This helps loosen up the mucus so it can drain.

Tell your parents if you have pain in your ears or fever with the stuffy nose. If so, you may need to see the

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you get rocks and dirt out of a knee scrape? Thank you, Paris Hebel

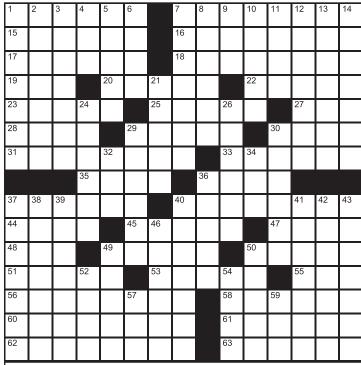

Dear Paris,

Great question. A knee scrape can be very painful, but as you know, if you do not get the dirt cleaned out, the knee will get infected with bacteria, and the pain will get worse.

So here are a few tricks for cleaning the wound in a way that will hurt less. First, find some baby shampoo. Baby shampoo can be used as a soap that does not burn in the cuts, just like it does not burn a baby's eves.

Next, use running water that is about the same temperature as your body. The water should not feel warm or cool when you touch it. Water that is the same temperature as your body will not hurt as it cleans out the wound. Use the soap and running water to gently wash out all the dirt and small rocks from the scrape.

Once the wound is clean, cover the scrape with a clean bandage. Some people put a little antibiotic ointment on the scrape before applying the bandage. This is good to do on the first day, but after that, just wash the area with soap and don't use ointment, because it may slow the heal-

Saying it Sincerely

"Bruised & Broken" Pastor Mike Christian Jr. River of Life Assembly of God A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

I once heard a little girl sing, "Jesus loves the little children, all the children of the world, red and yellow, black and blue..."

Did you catch it? "Red and yellow, black and blue." She was right you know! Maybe the words came out wrong, but then again, maybe they didn't. The sad fact is, there are many children and many adults as well, who are "black and blue." Many of those around us (many of whom we are not even aware), are living each day in a bruise and brokenhearted state. Jesus said that his mission in coming to the earth was to... "heal the broken-hearted" and... "to set at liberty them who are bruised" (Luke 4:18, cf. Isa-

There are several reasons some people, even Christians, often withhold themselves from the bruised and broken. Many people are so bruised, broken or weary themselves, they cannot help anyone else. Also, they may not realize that others are hurting. Many who are hurting force themselves to appear to be happy. They put on a "Happy Face." And, sometimes people are so preoccupied with their own lives they don't even notice those around them who truly need help.

Those who are bruised and broken by events and situations in their lives need to know that there is "Someone" out there who really understands what they've been or are going through. They need to be introduced to the "Friend who sticks closer than a brother" (Proverbs 18:24). They need to have a personal encounter with the Lord Jesus Christ. He too, was broken and bruised. His very own disciples forsook him and fled when he was crucified upon that wooden cross. At one point, even his heavenly father, God, had to turn away because of the sin that he bore for all of us on that cross.

Jesus understands what's happened to you, what's happening in your life at this very moment. He knows your heart. He knows your pain and suffering. He's "been there, and done that!"

He has the answer for all the hurt, all the brokenness. And the answer is, turn your life, and everything you are or ever hope to be, over to him. Enter into a close, personal relationship with the Savior who can heal the bruises and mend the brokenness in your life. King David said in the 23rd Psalm, "He restores my soul!" Let Jesus, through the power of the Holy Spirit, reach into your life and "restore your soul." Let him bathe you in his love, his grace, and his mercy. Let him do what he came to do, for you. Let him heal the bruises and brokenness.

Remember:

"Humble yourself under God's mighty hand, that he may lift you up in due time.

Cast all your cares on him because he cares for Peter 5:6-7

Blessings to you in Jesus' name!

On 5-27 at 3:05 a.m., NPD responded to a disturbance near the Rec. Center. Amanda Noyakuk, 20, of Nome, was contacted and found to be highly intoxicated. Noyakuk was eventually transported to a local residence where she was released to a responsible party. Noyakuk was cited for Minor Consuming Alcohol (Under 21).

On 5-27 3:19 a.m NPD responded to a disturissuance of two citations to Patrick Okitkon, 18, of Nome; and a 16-year-old female for Minor Consuming Alcohol (Under 21). The minors were transported to and released to a responsible party.

On 5-27 at 8:38 p.m., NPD received a report of an attempted bicycle theft occurring on E. D Street. The owner of a mountain bike observed a juvenile male attempting to steal the bicycle. When confronted, the juvenile fled from the scene, however the owner of the bicycle was able to take a picture of the suspect. NPD investigation continues with active efforts to identify the suspect.

On 5-27 at 11:16 p.m., NPD received a report of a stolen bicycle taken from a residence on Carston Way. The bicycle is described as a silver Schwinn mountain bike with blue forks. The theft occurred during the early morning hours of 5-27-12. Anyone with information about this theft is asked to call NPD at 443-5262.

As to be expected with warmer weather and open roads, NPD has received numerous reports of theft. Primary in these categories is the theft of bicycles and other easily transported items. Citizens of Nome should be aware that any unsecured property presents an easy target for those who would wish to take your property.

Bicycle locks are a primary means to secure your bicycle. Always remember to secure the bicycle to something that doesn't move and to run the frame and wheels if possible in order to secure all of the components of the bicycle. Registering your bicycle with the Nome Police is a good way for us to identify you as the owner. Registration is free and can be completed in a few minutes at NPD. We are located at 102 Nome Bypass Road.

Members of the compunity should also secure.

Members of the community should also secure gas cans, fuel and other fuel related items that may be at risk due to the higher cost of fuel. Mark them conspicuously with permanent marker with your name and phone number so they can identified if taken. A bike lock or similar device can be used to them to an immobile object.

And a reminder to: lock the doors of your residence; remove all valuables from plain sight in your vehicles; remove the keys from the ignition of any vehicle; and lock the doors of any vehicle. This will not only help keep your property safe, but also keep people from trespassing in/on your property or committing other crime.

By securing your property, it makes it more di ficult for someone to take it.

Please immediately report any suspicious circumstances to the Nome Police at 443-5262. Any description of the suspicious person(s) will help us to identify them. If you are the victim of theft, please notify us immediately — the sooner we know about your loss, the sooner we can start working on recovering your property.

Thank you for your help in reducing crime in our community. Chief J. Papasodora far this year, Handeland told the board.

"As the price of fuel increases, we will realize a more dramatic savings off the wind," Handeland said. "We are looking at increasing energy efficiency every way we can."

The large EWT 900-KW wind turbines are built to operate in the Arctic and are producing power in Delta Junction. Kotzebue's generators of the same brand have gone into operation this month.

Board member Berda Willson cautioned that NJUS generators would never stop for good, as the grid needs continual power even when the wind is at rest.

Banner Wind operators and NJUS have agreed to share information on the wind alternative in continual open dialogue and keep each side in the know about plans to move for-

Meanwhile, Carl Emmons, NJUS board member, had an idea to put an underused transmission line stretching along the way from NJUS generators to the Rock Creek Mine to work carrying excess wind generated power to the high school or other community facility.

'We're in a unique situation. Most wind farms don't have [ready-built transmission lines] in a small community like ours," Emmons said.

He would second that idea, Fred Moody, board member, said.

"NJUS could sell energy to the school and cut down on their fuel consumption and help our sales," he NovaGold paid NJUS to construct the line to power the mine, now in limbo after shutting down preparation to mine.

NJUS and Delta Western have signed a contract for DW to provide fuel by barge this season. The first of two deliveries needs to arrive between June 20 and July 10, with the second and final delivery due by Sept. 10.

NJUS generators drank 2.12 million gallons last year. NJUS has required 2.6 million gallons for the oncoming season, which allows about a 400,000-gallon safety margin. Regardless of rumors and according to Handeland, NJUS had 571,000 gallons remaining at the NJUS tank farm in mid-May, enough to last until the new fuel arrived. A small portion of the fuel on hand belonged to the school, he said. On May 15, the generators had used 87,000 gallons for half of May.

The contract calls for DW to deliver between 1.6 million and 2.2 million gallons, allowing for revisions of the amount with three-days' notice. NJUS and DW acknowledge that NJUS has requested an additional 400,000 gallons. DW must notify NJUS by June 1 if DW cannot come up with the 400,000 gallons additional fuel. If not, NJUS would be free to seek another source, according to the agreement.

The NJUS board demanded a tight contract on delivery, as DW, for reasons being aired currently in a court, did not deliver all fuel required by Bonanza Fuel last season. Bonanza Fuel has filed suit against DW for $1.5 million, the amount the Nome fuel retailer said it had to pay extra to have another company deliver fuel in January by icebreaker.

NOME ATTRACTION— Musk Ox (Ovibos moschatus) have moved to lower elevations after having spent much of the winter month at altitude in the hills of the Seward Peninsula where the snow cover is thinner and foraging easier. This herd spent a sunny morning resting up for the day along the Beam Road just outside of Nome.

Agencies meet with gold seekers

Miners protest rule barring mining at river mouths

By Sandra L. Medearis

About 70 people in various stages of gold fever gathered May 31 when state and federal agency reps came to town for a grand meeting with gold seekers to discuss the ins and outs of mining—within the rules.

Timing of the meeting made it a kick-off information session for the oncoming mining season and new suction dredge miners. As of May 31, the DNR had processed 138 Annual Placer Mining Applications that could potentially pertain to the two state offshore recreational mining areas and a total of 159 permits pertaining to offshore mining activities in the Nome area, according to Brent Goodrum, director of DNR Division of Mining, Land and Water. The cutoff for applications was May 30. The offshore lease sale last September made for a unique situation this season with a lot of interest in mining the Nome area and a need for information, Goodrum said. A multipleagency effort had produced a miner's guide available at the meeting and on the DNR Web site.

"We want to paint a picture of what right looks like the first time," Goodrum said.

All the state and federal agency reps that came to town for the meeting had some way of influencing their mining efforts from a legal, environmental or safety standpoint and the means to back it up.

Information sources included the U.S. Coast Guard, state Department of Natural Resources, state Department of Environmental Conservation, state Dept. of Fish and Game, Port of Nome and Nome Police Dept.

Mayor Denise Michels opened the meeting with a welcome to all, urging that miners not look upon agencies as enemies, but as sources of information.

The miners were ready with questions after each official had given a spiel on their agency's particular persuasion. Following the formal presentations, miners had an opportunity to quiz agencies and air beefs at their particular tables around the room at the Mini Convention Center

A bunch of miners expressed feelings ranging from dismay to downright frustration with the late addition of a rule to be newly enforced that keeps dredges half a mile away—year around—from the mouths of rivers serving anadro-

THEY'VE SEEN IT ALL—Long-time local miners, Jan Kralik, Norm Stiles and Jim Hanson, enjoy a bit of joshing and likely swap some fibs at the May 31 state and federal agency meeting with miners at Mini Convention Center. About 75 people including agency reps attended the confab.

Crowley gives Bonanza gas

By Sandra L. Medearis

Bonanza Fuel's unleaded gas delivered short of last barge season expectations has run out. However, Bonanza customers will still be able to load up and get gas on the way out of town this weekend. Crowley has surplus available for Bonanza to buy or borrow.

Bonanza received only 1.3 million gallons of fuel in a winter icebreaker delivery against an original expectation of 1.6 million gallons in its last delivery by Delta Western, Jason Evans, head of Sitnasuak Native Corp., said. Bonanza is SNCs wholly owned fuel retail subsidiary. The Russian icebreaker class tanker Renda was able to pick up only 300,000 gallons of unleaded gasoline at Dutch Harbor.

Bonanza contracted with Vitus Marine to deliver fuel with the Renda under escort of the USCG icebreaker Healy after the final Delta Western delivery did not arrive. Bonanza and Delta Western are in court currently where Bonanza is suing Delta Western for $1.5 million. What Bonanza says it had to spend extra to get the dramatic winter fuel delivery to Nome, cracking through about 300 miles of iced-up seas. Delta Western said it could not deliver the fuel because of a November storm.

"We are extremely low on some of our products because we were not able to get our full delivery," Evans said. He confirmed Monday that Bonanza would be trucking gasoline in Local offshore mining permit: R.I.P.

By Sandra L. Medearis

A local mining permit fee to recover costs generated by the summer season's rush to riches offshore Nome beaches seems to have died. The City had proposed a permit costing $500 to $1,000 per season to help with extra costs of enforcing civil and criminal issues among mining tourists touched with gold fever.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

City Manager Josie Bahnke suggested the Nome Common Council table the move. Administrating the permit program would stretch resources too thin, and there were other pressing issues. Registration at the Port of Nome harbor office would help to keep track of who was on the offshore mining areas, Bahnke said. They agreed.

Several miners spoke during public comment period concerning rules for using the Port of Nome. A rule to come before the Council for approval June 13 calls for dredges and other gold seeking craft with 20-inch or shallower draft to use the Snake River for moorage, leaving harbor space for larger craft to alleviate crowding during the fishing, mining and freight season.

"That rule doesn't hold water with seamanship and draft," Vern Atkinson told the Council. Some very large vessels don't have 20 inches draft.

In a strong wind, "Belmont Point is going to be dangerous when they drag anchor. It's going to be a big piled-up mess," Atkinson said. "It should be first-come, first-served."

Sam Slivkoff chimed in on the chorus, concerning havoc in the Belmont Point river area.

"I can park my boat and by the time I get there, it could be high on the bank," he said. "I could kill three to four days, depending on how high it is."

Several council members commented later in the week that rules had to allow fair use of the Port facilities, with consideration for residents who use the port to make a living year after year and also pay taxes in Nome.

The Council just had the first reading—the second public hearing and final vote on the harbor and river moorage separation—occur at the June 13 Council meeting, Josie Bahnke, city manager, said. If the amendment passes, craft will be measured and assigned to harbor or river when operators do the required check-in for a permit at the Harbormaster's Office.

master's Office.

The Council voted into first reading a series of City budgets that will be subject to further deliberation by the Council and public hearing before final passage: general fund budget, based on 11 mills, $10.587 million; construction capital projects budget, $831,811; special revenue fund budget, $333,732; capital projects budget, $16.45 million; and Port of Nome fund budget, $6.4 million.

Copies of the budget are available for the public; meetings concerning the budgets are open to the public.

Fifteen people applied for nine positions open on the Nome Museum and Library Commission. Until recently the panel had five seats. The Council expanded the number to nine. Councilman Stan Andersen discovered that commission members had not been reappointed annually as the ordinance required. Therefore, the existing seats and the additional seats came open for appointment.

The Council approved the following applicants: John Handeland, Cussy Kauer, Charlene Saclamana, Ron Engstrom and Charles Lean, all incumbents, plus: Ann Whipple, Richard Beneville, Howard Farley and Councilwoman Josie Stiles.

In other action, the Council:

- Passed a resolution awarding a bid for the purchase of the City of Nome Ambulance Garage to Kevin Busk for $122,500.
- Approved a fee waiver for Nome Youth Facility to use Old St. Joe's for an art show.
- Denied Dept. of Natural Resources

Letters

Dear Editor,

Some of the people in our community were outraged when we opened last week's paper and learned for the first time from a notice in the paper that the Bureau of Indian Affairs, without talking to anybody in Teller, took away management of the Teller reindeer herd and gave it to someone with no connection to our community.

My great grandparents were on the beach at Port Clarence when the government cutter Bear unloaded the first reindeer brought to Alaska in 1902. My family and other people in Teller have depended on reindeer ever since.

Today, we have by far, the healthiest and best-managed herd on the Seward Peninsula. Most of the other herds are either gone or down to only a few deer. That is no accident. It is because Teller people take care of the reindeer today as we have done for more than a 100 years. Reindeer feed our community and no matter what BIA thinks, our people know how to take care of reindeer.

Now we find out from some BIA worker sitting in an office more that

1,000 miles away that we can no longer be trusted to manage the herd and they need to turn it over to somebody from outside our community. That would be bad enough but to find out about it by reading that the deal was already carved in stone without giving Teller people a chance to have any say in it was just plain wrong and needs to be reversed. We need to start over with Teller people at the table.

The Teller Traditional Council found out the Kawerak Reindeer Herder's Association and BIA decided on it at a meeting in Nome and they were going to have another in Anchorage that was closed door and we could not send representatives to the meeting.

I called the Kawerak head office. Loretta Bullard was out of town but the person who was acting in her place told me it was between the owners and the new manager and that is just the way it is. Like it was none of our business.

That is wrong. The days when government bureaucrats can make decisions on their own affecting the lives of people who have been living on this land for 1,000 of years is over and good riddance. Finding out about something like this by reading about it in the paper is an insult. Letting us know that BIA and Kawerak think nobody in Teller is capable of managing the herd is another insult. The BIA needs to come to our community and start this all over from the beginning and this time, Teller people need to be at the table. Joe Garnie

Good Morning

This is morning (Tuesday) around 5.30, my dog was barking furiously right outside my front door. She did not stop, so I walked downstairs and opened the door to find myself staring into the eyes of a musk ox. My poor dog was back as far as she could get on my porch. I can tell you I was a bit nervous as I unhooked my dog, brought her into my house and quickly shut the door!

Then of course, I ran back upstairs for my iPhone so I could take a picture!

The musk ox had moved away, but not far.

Later I had to call the police because the musk ox had moved away, I heard other dogs barking and I was afraid those dogs would get hurt.

I love musk ox, but not that close and not when it endangered my dog in my yard.

I am attaching my picture, but none captured the look I got from an agitated musk ox at my front door! Carolyn McDougald Nome, AK

Short Term Memory

Only six short months ago we were awaiting the arrival of the Russian fuel tanker Renda and complaining about the high cost of fuel oil. We are still complaining. We never stopped complaining. Aside from complaining, what are we doing to solve the problem of killer fuel costs? We need answers and there is nothing but deadly silence. Last year our governor told us we could take out a state loan to explore and drill for gas. Oh wait, that was two years ago. How many years has Nome Joint Utilities been talking about a wind farm?

We have to be energy independent. We can't afford to sit and wait and be at the mercy of the oil companies. We need to be in charge of our own destiny. Surely we have some enlightened leadership who can generate some push for natural gas development so we can burn some of the fuel that is likely to be right under our noses. Sure we need an infrastructure to get it from the ground to the power plant, but we are smart enough to solve that problem. Surely we can get wind wattage to our homes.

It takes us too long to rise to the occasion. We are wasting too much time waiting for someone on a white horse to ride to our rescue. That will not happen. We need to have leadership with a take charge, problem-solving attitude. We also need citizens to demand that we move forward to solve the fuel problem and give us some energy relief. Let's not have a repeat of last year's financial damage. - N.L.M.-

A Look at the Past:

The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every continued on page 8

Eliminating e-waste from the Norton Sound region

By Amelia Cooper

A sharp west wind blew across the Kawerak parking lot Friday afternoon, slipping between piles of outdated electronics. A small cast of volunteers and organizer Anahma Saito shielded their ears with hoods and hats as they cut the ends off of power cords and transferred CRT monitors from cars to Conex containers. They were preparing the "ewaste" to be recycled.

This is the second e-waste collection event in Nome, but Saito said she doesn't want to call it annual yet. The goal, Saito said, is "to get hazardous materials out of our region."

"E-waste," or electronic waste, is anything electronic that contains heavy metals such as mercury, cadmium, or lead. This includes VCRs, fax machines, television sets, light bulbs, cameras, audio equipment, batteries, and most notoriously, computers and cell phones.

"Electronics are the fastest growing waste stream," Saito said. "Everybody needs a new phone or a new iPad." According to the US Environmental Protection Agency website, "electronic waste is growing 2-3 times faster than any other waste

Improper disposal of electronics is a health hazard in both developed and developing countries. Heavy metal poisoning, brain damage, nervous system damage, and birth defects are a few possible results of inhaling or ingesting hazardous e-waste materials.

When electronics are thrown into landfills, toxins can leach into the water shelf, Saito said, "whether it's because they're shot up, burned, or even crushed by heavy machinery."

"When you go by a landfill and you can smell it burning," Saito paused, "don't breathe."

When e-waste is burned, it pollutes the air and falls out onto the land, where it can bioacculumate. "It falls onto our greens and berries," Saito said. "Animals eat the contaminated vegetation, and we eat the animals."

Saito, who is the Regional Back-haul and Recycling Specialist for Kawerak, runs the e-waste program. It is one of 12 EPA-funded IGAP programs.

Bering Air has been helping Saito and IGAP recycle e-waste by transporting waste materials for free for three years. This year, Alaska Logistics is taking Nome's e-waste to Seattle for free in two Conex containers they've provided.

Ultimately, the e-waste will end up at Total Reclaim Inc., an ISO 14001-certified recycling company who operates in the Pacific Northwest. There, the e-waste will be recycled with meticulous attention to environmental impacts.

Saito is hopeful for the future of e-waste recycling in the Norton Sound region. She has received a lot of e-waste from surrounding villages. Many people who missed the event last year have been saving their electronics for this year's June 1 event. "We've already had more people this morning than we had the whole first day last year," she said.

Man dies at Cripple River Mining

Saturday afternoon June2, the Alaska State Troopers responded to a call for help from the Cripple River Mining Camp about 12 miles west of Nome. Emergency Medical Personnel from Nome arrived but were unable to revive Mr. Jack Swick, 66, of Utica, Ohio.

Swick was found unresponsive next to his ATV at the mining camp by local camp residents. Emergency medical personnel pronounced Swick deceased likely of natural causes.

The Alaska Medical Examiners Office was contacted and released the deceased to family members in Ohio.

mous fish. Anadromous fish? Those are fish that are born in fresh water, spend most of their lives at sea and return to spawn. In the Nome area, that means salmon, which use most of the rivers, including the Cripple, Penny and Nome rivers. The stipulation was added within the past month. Kerwin Krause, geologist and mining property manager, reminded miners that there was another buffer zone from half a mile to one mile where there could not be any mining between June 1 and July

Mining within the half mile radius could churn up silt and particles causing fish to swim around in poor visibility and enter areas where they would be vulnerable to predators, biologists said, or circle around where they would be vulnerable to flying predators, Scott Kent, biologist with ADF&G said. The way needs to be clear for adult fish entering rivers to reproduce and also for smoltsyoung salmon-going out to sea. Additionally, turbidity interferes with the life cycles of other fish, for instance, capelin, that use the beaches to spawn. Capelin are not only fun to cavort after and catch in buckets on the beach, but they are a vital contribution to the food chain as prey fish for marine mammals and Chinook salmon.

Kent added that other issues were noise and how it would affect the salmon harvest. Miners had a lot of 'yeah, buts" to offer, and biologists seemed to listen. Some wanted more information themselves and promised to find answers.

Yeah, but why have the buffer year-round when the fish are not entering or leaving the streams?

Biologists would look into that, Laura Jacobs, biologist with ADF&G Division of Habitat, said.

"We are not going to give you a word you can go home with and depend on today," she said. "We really did not want to put a stop to anything. We are trying to address concerns. Both sides have to give."

Kerwin Krause, DNR, said the year-round half-mile buffer stipulation had been on the books for 20

Yeah, but, what about the turbidity caused by U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dredging 40-some thousand yards of silt out of the harbor in Port of Nome at the Snake River mouth over most of the summer?

Jacobs said she would take the question back and respond after she had more information.

It is possible the fish are accustomed to the turbidity and therefore swim through it to get upstream to spawn, was another answer. Possibly a relaxation of the half-mile rule would occur.

Yeah, but, if turbidity was a threat, why did the DNR mining tract lease sale include lease tracts within a half-mile of the Nome River mouth? The rule affects some leases and some mining claims and part of the West Beach Recreational Mining Area.

Only parts of some tracts are in the no-mining zone. The fish have just the rivers for spawning and hatching; miners can dredge in many places, said representatives from AD F&G as well as DNR.

Agencies are using studies conducted on turbidity by an ADF&G biologist who has retired, the agency reps said in response to dredgers who asked for the scientific basis for the half-mile buffer at river mouths.

Several miners opined that no one mines at the Nome River mouth, as it is too deep with sand, that only the Snake was of concern—where turbidity already exists from seasonal harbor dredging and port activity.

Miner Jim Hanson observed that concerns as regards offshore dredging and a half-mine buffer at the river mouths sounded good for the

"We love fish," he said. But what about the millions and millions of fish, he wondered, that survive where there is high turbidity-Copper River, Yukon River, Gulf of Alaska. "I can't help but wonder why we are justified to come down on this at the last minute.'

Several miners mentioned that set nets, from which suction dredges must maintain a 300-foot distance, are sometimes poorly marked, even with soda bottles, in one example.

Subsistence set nets should be marked with a five-gallon bucket or a white buoy and commercial with a red buoy. The buoys must have the owner's name, address and phone number, he said.

Joy Baker, harbormaster, stressed that the harbor would be busy and that called for cooperation. There would be barges, fishing boats, dredges, tugs and landing craft.

"It is going to be a significant safety issue," she said, urging small dredges to go slow and yield the right-of-way to larger craft that could not "stop on a dime."

Operators would need to raft together, "tie up to other people or let other folks tie to you. If you have only one vessel, find a buddy," Baker said.

Gaye Sheffield of the Marine Advisory Program asked the dredge operators to help out with observations and reports on diseased seals they might see. Sheffield said seals might have open bloody sores and "massive hair loss." The yet to be identified disease affects the four kinds of seals in the Bering Sea: ring, bearded, spotted and ribbon seals. Scientists don't have evidence that the disease is transmissible to humans. Be on the lookout for seals with unusual behavior, as coming right up to the dredge, Sheffield told miners, and if possible, get photos even with cell phones and report sightings to 907-443-2397.

U.S. Coast Guard representatives Lt. William Albright and Petty Officer Francis Shiano cautioned miners to clean up spills and/or notify the Coast Guard of spills.

"Any oil or discoloration of water is a reportable quantity," Shiano, Coast Guard Sector Anchorage marine science technician, said. The more proactive miners were in cleaning up spills and the more proactive in reporting spills, the more accommodating the Coast Guard would be, he said. "If you do spill and do not report the spill, the penalties can be severe," Shiano said, including a fine of three times the cost of the spill per day or $40,000 per day.

Krause introduced retired Nome Police Dept. Sgt. Byron Redburn who would be the DNR administrator in Nome during the mining season. Redburn will have a boat and monitor the mining activity.

Krause reminded dredge operators to have on their watercraft 12-inch by 16-inch numbers matching the last four digits of their state mining permits.

Nome Police Dept. Chief John Papasodora urged miners to "keep it safe, keep it calm and peaceful. There are going to be people out there with competing interests. Obviously I don't have propellers on my feet and pontoons in my back pocket, so I can't get out there and help you if you get into trouble," he said, adding that there are other resources like Search and Rescue.

Papasodora urged miners to k track of equipment. With the price of gas so high, gas cans would be at a premium, he added. "Mark your

"Within the last day or two we've learned about the concerns about the standoff distance from the river mouths," Goodrum said. "I believe we have new information that we and the other agencies need to sit down and go over."

Goodrum said he could foresee a special meeting to hash over the buffer areas around river mouths because it was such a central issue at the meeting. Because DNR has the mandate to be a multiple use agency, there are other issues besides mining with which his department has to be concerned, he said.

"We don't want to leave anyone out in the cold, but we have to weigh everyone's issues and concerns that are on the table," he said." I think we've learned as much as the information we provided new miners today.

Attendance and tobacco policies tackled by the school board

By Lori Head

With bare bulletin boards, empty classrooms and dimly lighted hallways at Nome Elementary, the school board met on May 29 and discussed an issue plaguing performance and success for Nome students: attendance, or lack thereof.

Kevin Busk, junior high teacher, shared data, which showed correlations between attendance and math competency. As one would expect, the best gains of two to three math levels were achieved by students with approximately five or less days of absence in one school year. At the other end, many students with absences ranging between 22 to 70 days showed no gains or losses of up to two math levels. There were outliers in the data with one student missing 45 days and still advancing from math level five to level eight and others who missed five or fewer days yet showed no growth or level

A discussion of possible solutions or efforts encouraging attendance included: determining a number of absences that would disqualify a student from earning credit, a "safety net" bus that could transport students who had slept in and didn't have a later bus to catch, mandatory summer school, public service announcements, Native Education Parent Committee involvement and improved communication with parents. Superintendent Michael Brawner mentioned that grants NPS had applied for would guide many of the community engagement ideas mentioned.

Sylvia Matson, parent of both an elementary and a high school student, addressed the board and commented on a system that potentially sets students up for poor attendance. She noted that the elementary students start at 8:00 a.m., the junior high/ACSA students start after 9:00 a.m. and the high school drops back to an 8:20 a.m. start time. Matson feels that some junior high students may find themselves falling back asleep, missing the last bus to school and at the age of 12, 13 or 14, unable to get out to the school. Another set up is a high school student pushing the snooze button and catching the junior high bus, consequently being late for school. "A lot of that is ruled by buses," but Matson said a consideration of schedule changes may be something the board could entertain.

Tobacco policy:

According to Danielle Sylvester, K-12 Tobacco Control Advocate, the tobacco possession/use discipline plan is currently:

- Elementary School

First offense – two consecutive 30-minute after school detentions and possible suspension, inform social worker and police.

Second offense - one-day suspension, inform social worker and po-

Third offense - three day suspension, inform social worker and po-

Jr. High/High School

First offense – one to three days suspension, inform police. Second offense - three to five days suspension, inform police.

Further offenses follow a matrix and increase the number of days sus-

Sylvester suggested "progressive discipline options" that could be combined and included: a verbal warning, confiscation, parental notification, conferencing with administration, referring to police, mandatory tobacco education, youth court, community service and out-ofschool suspension. She mentioned that an adult told her that the consequence when they were in school was that it was reported to police, the student was taken in a police car, parents were called, there was a $50 fine, four hours of mandatory tobacco education and appearance at youth court. "So, that compared to what we have now, it shows the severity of it without having to kick a kid out of school." Board member Jennifer Reader commented that rather than sending students home to "watch SpongeBob" some of those consequences might be more effec-

Discussion also included employees and the consequences of smoking on school district property. If a district employee is caught smoking or chewing tobacco on school grounds, according to AR 3513.3, they will first be given a verbal reprimand. If it continues they will receive a disciplinary letter and if the "behavior is still not corrected, the employee will face suspension or termination." However, the school district does rent property to the Dept. of Transportation and to tenants of the dorm and apartments. It was determined those three properties are designated as rental property and are allowed specified smoking

MAP (Measures of Academic Progress) results:

Janeen Sullivan, Coordinator of Curriculum and Assessment, presented the 2011-2012 MAP results which tests in five areas: Reading, Language, Math, General Science and Science Concepts/Processes. Sullivan compared the percentage of students grades K-10 that scored at the 40th percentile or higher on the beginning, mid-year and end of year MAP tests. There were some bright spots. In reading, grades 1, 3, 5 and 6 showed increased percentages of students performing at the 40th percentile or higher; the greatest gain by the 5th graders jumping from 13 percent at the first of the school year to 36 percent by year's end. In math, grades K, 1, 3 and 8 showed gains in proficiency as well. The most dramatic range of scores was produced by the 1st graders in reading. First of the year they tested at 43 percent, mid-year dropped to 17 percent and by the end of the year, 48 percent were reading at or above the 40th percentile.

However, there was a disturbing amount of decreases in students performing at the 40th percentile from the beginning of the school year to the end. For example, 57 percent of 4th graders dropped to 42 percent in math, or 53 percent of 7th graders dropped to 30 percent in general science. Those being the extreme examples, and other drops less severe, yet the obvious question was how concerned to be with the results.

Sullivan explained that the end of year MAP testing does take place a week after the SBA (Standards Based Assessment) is administered. Students could be a little test weary. Also, with the MAP test, overall time per test subject is 30 to 45 minutes; however, if the test taker answers questions correctly, the questions keep coming. There is a possibility that students realize the sooner they start answering wrong the sooner the test is over.

ACSA lottery update:

Hindman, Todd principal/teacher of the Anvil City

Science Academy, reported that the lottery in May placed 11 applicants in next year's 5th grade, three in the 7th grade and two in the 8th grade with 27 on the waiting list. He also explained that a previously determined "enrollment cap" of 44 students may be a point of future discussion as the conference room currently being used by ACSA could accommodate more students.

Special Meeting:

Action items included the approval of the negotiated Classified Employee Contract beginning July 1, 2012 which was unanimous by the three board members present: Brennan, Amarok and Reader. The terms include salary increases of 1 percent in FY13, 2 percent in FY14 and 3 percent in FY15.

New teacher and salaried staff contracts approved:

 $Mr.\,\bar{Terry}\,\bar{R}oelfsema~as~Counselor$ Jr./Sr. High School; Kayla Smay as Special Education Teacher - Elementary; Lt. Colonel (Ret.) Robert Blake as Senior Army Instructor -Jr./Sr. High and Paula Coffman as Business Manager.

The next scheduled board meetings are a regular meeting on June 12 and a work session on June 26.

How does pain medication affect skin cancer?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Could an aspirin a day keep the dermatologist away? Experts say it is too early to tell, but the news is encouraging. According to a new study published in the journal Cancer, people who take common over-the-counter pain medications may have a lower risk of developing skin cancer.

The research, out of Denmark, found that people who were prescribed long-term courses of pain medications called nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) had a lower risk of developing malignant melanoma and other less serious forms of skin can-

NSAIDS include a wide-range of medications used to treat pain. Common examples of NSAIDs include: aspirin, ibuprofen, naproxen, and celecoxib. They are primarily used to treat pain, lower fevers, and reduce inflammation.

In the Denmark study, the skin cancer risk reduction in people who took NSAIDs was small. People who filled at least two prescriptions for an NSAID between 1991 and 2009 showed a DOCTOR₁₅ percent lower risk for squamous cell carcinoma and a 13 percent lower risk of malignant melanoma.

ALASKA

The researchers were quick to point out that the association does not necessarily mean that NSAIDs are the cause of the risk reduction. tion prevents skin cancer. Perhaps people who take medication are also more likely to use sunscreen.

But the findings provide a vital clue about a possible weakness in certain cancers.

For many years, researchers have known that NSAIDs also lower a person's risk of certain cancers, particularly colon cancer. The new study suggests that skin cancers may be slowed by the use of NSAIDs as Cancer experts have found that NSAIDs block the ability of many cancers to grow by blocking blood flow to the cancer and turning on an enzyme that causes cancer cells to literally commit suicide. But this effect does not apply to all cancers.

Though NSAIDs lower the risk of some cancers like skin and colon cancer, NSAIDs may actually increase the risk of other cancers, like cancers of the kidney and prostate.

Finding ways to prevent skin cancer is important. Skin cancer is the most common form of cancer in the United States. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) report that nearly 60,000 people a year are diagnosed with melanoma; the most serious form of skin cancer. And in 2008, the most recent year data is available, just over 8600 men and women died from melanoma.

Despite the encouraging research on NSAIDs, doctors do not believe that NSAIDs will replace standard treatments for skin cancer; nor should NSAIDs be considered a prevention of skin cancer.

Experts currently recommend sunscreen to prevent melanoma and other forms of skin cancer. Surgical removal of the abnormal skin cells is the primary means of treating serious skin cancer. Ask your doctor to evaluate any suspicious skin lesions at least once a year during your annual exam.

Kids get healthy with "Summercise"

By Amelia Cooper

Childhood diabetes prevention program, Summercise, is getting kids excited about their health. The program is a day camp designed to educate kids in nutrition and physical activity, according to CAMP Diabetes Dietitian Kendra Baggett. Summercise has two sessions during the summer. This year, the sessions are June 11-28 and July 9-26.

Children who are at least five years old can enroll in Summercise. 5- and 6-year-olds are grouped together. Children 7 and older can choose from a long list of classes to attend, including "Let it Fly! Ultimate Frisbee," "Cooking with Color" and "Traditional Living."

"We wouldn't turn anyone away," Baggett said, but "usually kids age out of Summercise." She estimated that most kids stop enrolling between ages 12 and 14. At 15, they can participate as assistants.

This year, between 150 and 200 kids from the region are enrolled in Summercise.

CAMP brings in about eight interns through the Nome Community Baptist Church each year, and hires between eight and 10 people locally-"usually high school students," Baggett said. There are also a number of community volunteers who help make the camp successful. "It's a big community event," CAMP Directer Kelly Keyes said.

Summercise is part of Michelle Obama's "Let's Move" initiative. "Let's Move" is a response to the nation-wide growth in the incidence of childhood obesity and diabetes.

Today, nearly one in three children in America are overweight or according to the "Let's Move" website. Obesity can lead to health problems such as diabetes, heart disease, high blood pressure, cancer, and asthma.

Both Summercise and Obama's initiative promote healthy eating using the USDA's visual portion reminder, MyPlate. It is a new addition to the remodeled food pyramid, MyPyramid tracker.

Nome was the first "Let's Move" town in Alaska. As of July 2011, the last time "Let's Move" cities and towns were counted, out of nearly 500 participants it was the only Alaskan one, according to the US Department of Health and Human Services website.

Keyes and Baggett agree that the Summercise program has had a lasting positive effect on the Nome community, though it is difficult to quantify. "It's increased their knowledge and attitude about healthy eating," Keyes said, referring to the kids who attend. They measure this using pre- and post- camp surveys.

"It's important to instill those healthy choices early on," Keyes

Registration fees vary slightly, but it is less than $100 per child to participate in the entire six weeks including pool use. The fee pays for use of the Nome Swimming Pool and Recreation Center, where Summercise classes are held Scholarships are available. "We don't want the registration cost to be a hindrance to kids who want to participate," Baggett said.

The transient nature of the Summercise staff produces a different environment each year. "There's always a new spin," Keyes said.

This is the 12th year of Summercise since the program was started in 2000 by Angela Gorn.

Baggett, who has worked for CAMP for four years, said, "It's always a fun adventure."

Janet J. Ahmasuk

Janet J. Ahmasuk died May 16, in Anchorage. Janet Jesfjeld was born in Hettinger, ND on July 24, 1943. She grew up on a cattle ranch in Perkins County, near Prairie City, SD and graduated from Hettinger High School in 1961. She graduated from college at the University of South Dakota in 1965 with a Bachelor's degree in Biochemistry. Her first job as a medical technologist was at the Marin County Hospital in San Rafael, CA.

She met Harold Ahmasuk Jr. on a tour in Nome, Alaska. Harold and Janet were married in June, 1971. She has lived in Nome ever since.

When Janet first moved to Alaska she worked at the Maynard McDougal Memorial Hospital, later Nome Norton Sound Regional Hospital. She wrote for the Nome Nugget newspaper and reported for the Village News and the School Board. Until the time of her death she had been working for the Bering Sea Women's Group.

Janet is survived by her husband, three children: Austin, Brandon, (Brenna), Meredith, two stepchildren Carol, Mike, and 13 grandchildren, her mother Pearle Jesfjeld, brother Clyde (Joan) Jesfjeld and family and many friends and relatives. She was preceded in death by her father George Jesfjeld, Norman and Eda Jesfjeld and two stepchildren John, David. She was a Lutheran and read the Bible often, at the time of passing her Lutheran rights were read to her.

Janet was a very well-read person, bought many books and newspapers that she found interesting such as: true crime, astrology, poetry, Anchorage Daily News and history. She was up to date on current, national affairs and enjoyed watching such shows as The View, CNN, Larry King and Food Network, The Book Report and The Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show. She believed in angels and had many books about them.

She enjoyed long and fruitful conversations, and some not so fruitful. She also liked looking up family history dating back to the 1700s. She was very knowledgeable about many religions. She was able to tell us scientific names of plants and animals and the Latin language, she always said "it doesn't hurt to take another language and know a little Latin.' She liked scrapbooking and reading many different cookbooks, especially one of her grandmother's. She was a huge fan of Elvis Presley and liked Willy Nelson. Beautiful sunny afternoons, the light breeze on her face, cranberry picking in the fall, flowers and driving out to the cabin were things she loved. If she went boating it had to be calm and she considered herself a fair weather

Janet took great interest in remembering birthdays, holidays, anniversaries, and special days. Janet loved all and forgave all unconditionally and no one could laugh like her. She will be greatly missed by all. Her ashes will be scattered at Crater Creek near Nome, AK on her birthday with family. Sympathies can be sent to Ahmasuk Family Box 693, Nome AK 99762.

day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are preserved forever as his legacy in the "McDaniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

This diary was painstakingly transcribed and proofed by museum staff from the original 3"x5" journal book kept in Wilfred's pocket throughout the summer of 1900. The spelling errors are all his!

In 1898, the Three Lucky Swedes discovered gold at Anvil Creek. Over the next winter, miners left the Canadian Klondike and streamed into this area mushing dog teams, walking and even riding bikes down the frozen Yukon River to the Bering Sea. By the summer of 1899 all the creeks had been staked. In late July 1899, when we were called Anvil City, there were hundreds of frustrated miners with no ground to dig. As luck would have it, as the story goes, one of the soldiers who was here to help keep the peace, ran his hand through the beach sands and found GOLD! There was gold on the beach!

So, back then, long before aviation, one took a ship to get to

The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel May 21, 1900

Left Pier 7 San Francisco on S.S. Zealandia at 3:20PM. Crossed the bar at 6 p.m. 8 p.m. got seasick and went to bed.

May 22, 1900

Felt quite well when I woke up. Went up on the hurricane deck for a while. Grew sick in an hour or so and went below. Have not eaten anything since I came aboard and from present indications will not eat very soon. Went to bed feeling quite badly.

May 23, 1900

Felt fine when I awoke this morning, but as soon as I stirred around, I grew sick. At 8 a.m. I went up on the hurricane deck and laid down in a blanket where I staid until 8 p.m. The sea began to get rough and the wind blew very strong in the evening. The indications are for a storm.

May 24, 1900

We are in a southwester and everything is beginning to roll around in great shape. Everybody is heaving Jonah and no one is up. The sea is getting very rough. None of us have eaten a thing but some hard tack and canned fruit and oranges. We are in quite a storm. The wind is howling and rain falling and the seas are coming all over the ship. Went on deck for a while in the evening just to see how things looked. When I saw the old boat keel over and her rail go under and fellows go sprawling over the decks, I was ready to retire. Every time she rolls everything just goes a flying in the cook room and baggage and valises go rolling and sliding all over. Everybody is in bed and sicker than the devil.

The storm is as bad as ever. The steamer had to heave to until the weather moderates. I went above and enjoyed the fun for a while. Took two pictures under great difficulty. The waves looked like mountains and one would think from appearances that they would cover us. I feel quite safe on the Zealandia, as she is all right only she is a great roller. We have not been to the table yet and the prospects are not very flattering to get there very soon.

May 26, 1900

Went to the table but could not eat very heartily. I am as weak as a hungry cat and believe I have lost 25 pounds. The weather is calmer and we are on our course again. We are going very slowly. Have not averaged more than 6 or 7 knots since we left. The weather is cloudy and windy.

May 27, 1900

I feel quite well today only very weak. We had singing and preaching on the hurricane deck today. Took a picture during the service. Had a very good sermon by Rev. Meserve of Oakland. Ate a pie today and it put me on my feet in great shape. Ate a yellow turnip with disastrous results. Was in great misery for several hours. Took some medicine and walked the deck until nearly midnight. Got better and went to

May 28, 1900

The sea is like a pond and all is lovely. We are making fine time about 12 knots. I feel much better and have my sea legs now. We stopped this morning for about an hour as the engines had to be packed. We are getting into a cold climate very fast. The days are getting very long. We are now about 1200 miles from S.F. and the nearest land is a thousand miles away.

May 29, 1900

The ship is making good time now. We have gone 280 miles in the past 24 hours. I ate the biggest dinner on the voyage. Had salt horse, sauerkraut, and spuds. The wind is coming up again and we may have some more rough weather. We expect to make Dutch Harbor next Thursday. We are on the program for some music at the concert tonight. Am half sick with a cold and don't think I'll play. Weather is getting colder and the sea is very choppy. Saw some seaweed today indicating that we are nearing land. Grub is about ready. Ate some potatoes and mulligan for supper and it was too much for me. Went to bed feeling very badly.

May 30, 1900

Was very sick all day, had a fearful headache and my cold is much worse than when I was seasick.

May 31, 1900

Feel a little better today. Got very little sleep last night. It's enough to make a well man crazy to be in this crowd, gambling, cursing, growling goes on all night. Got to Dutch Harbor this eve.

June 1, 1900

Have not eaten since Tuesday and can hardly walk. We went ashore this morning and took some exer-My stomach is rebelling against ship's grub. Got some canned fruit and crackers ashore and they tasted fine. Have a very bad cold and consulted the doctor. He gave me some medicine.

June 2, 1900

Am feeling better today. Went ashore this morning and took a long walk to down the coast. We found some wood and an oilcan and had a fine dinner of boiled mussels. Also attended church today. There was a very impressive service in the Greek Church at Unalaska. The members are all Aleuts and Russians. The members are very devout. All took part, children and grown people. There are no seats in the church, everyone stands. The service is conducted in Russian and is similar to the Catholic. The interior of the church is very beautiful. Pictures, images and candles and gaudy hanging make it very showy.

June 3, 1900

Today is Sunday and everything is very quiet. Do not feel very strong today and did not walk very far. Went out over the hills and took a wash in a little brook. It's the first fresh water I have washed in since leaving home. There was preaching today, but did not attend as my cold

June 4, 1900

Am feeling much better today. If I just had decent food I'd get well in a day. Today is a beautiful day. The sky is clear and the sun is shining brightly. It's the first sunny day we have had since the second day out. Took a long tramp to the top of a high peak. The summer is covered with snow and the view is grand. Took several pictures. The side next to town is all soil and covered with moss but on the other it is rocky cliffs and precipices right down to the Behring Sea. The snow overhangs in great sheets making a very grand picture. The weather was very warm on the summit in spite of the snow. Took our overcoats but did not need them. Was quite tired when we returned. Did not eat much for supper. I can't go their grub. Has some tea and crackers and let their old mulligan swill go begging.

June 5, 1900

I am gradually getting over my cold. Did not go very far from the ship. Today we laid up to the wharf and will take coal tomorrow. We had prunes for dinner today. This is the only real item of interest I have to note. We do not know how much longer we will remain here. We have two U.S. vessels in harbor. Gun boat Whaling and "The Rush."

June 6, 1900

Today is quite windy. Did not stay ashore very long today. Had beans for dinner for the first time. Went on a walk this afternoon. The day is very sunny and warm. The Senator came in today. She has been up near Nome and had to come back on account of the ice. The Charles Nelson left last night and the Aberdeen this morning.

June 7, 1900

We are still coaling and don't know when we will leave. Was on shore part of the day. I am getting better everyday and hope to be all right soon.

June 8, 1900

Today is not very pleasant. The sky is cloudy and the air is very damp. The Threasher arrived today from Nome. There was a funeral today from the Senator. One of the passengers died just before reaching here. One fellow was taken from our boat to the hospital. I wonder that some of our passengers have not died, as the sanitary conditions are terrible. I am feeling a little better everyday. Took quite a walk today. I am able to eat most of the food so that I am growing stronger. Vessels of Dutch Harbor, Zealandia, Ohio, Roanoke, Lakme, Rob't Dotla, San Pedro, Elika Thompson, Santa Ana, Elk, Threasher, Rush, Wheeling, Sequoia, Valencia, Centennial and the tug Meteor, also a tow, the Mercury and tow boat Wallowa.

Photo by Wilfred McDaniel from the Carrie M. McLain Memorial June 3, 1900 – "Dutch Harbor on Unalaska Island in the Aleutian Archipelago, 1900. This is a very beautiful harbor, formed by the islands. The water is as calm as a pond but is quite deep."

The Zealandia is still taking coal. Finished coaling about 10 a,m. and are preparing to pull out. Left the wharf at 11a.m.. The tug Meteor pulled us around and then we were off. We had a grand farewell. Every steamer blew us a salute of three long blasts. They were answered individually by the Zealandia. Went down the bay at half speed and were soon out into the Behring Sea and flying northward. Passed an active volcano on our starboard about 1 p.m. Ate a good dinner today and felt very much better. The sea is very calm, no rougher than San Fran Bay. We passed the S.S. Olympia going to Dutch H. at 3:10 p.m. Saw a whale this eve. A man was taken from the steerage, who had typhoid pneumonia. He died in less than an hour after the Dr. had him removed. He was dying when they brought him up. I saw him as he was carried away and he looked like a dead man

June 10, 1900

Today is Sunday, but it is the same as any other day on board ship. The sea is very smooth and we are making good time. Went 278 miles in the past 24 hours. Struck the ice this evening. We are between two big floes, which extend out as far as I can see. It is very foggy and we are going very slowly. The ice makes a grand scene. We laid by during most of the night. Have not made very much headway. The captain is very cautious about forcing his way.

June 11, 1900

The sun is out part of the time and then it is foggy. It is very cold this morning. The rigging is covered with frost and ice. We are out of the floes and among the broken cakes and bergs. We are barely moving and just winding in and out among the ice blocks. We have got in the midst of the ice floes. We are now pushing our way, now backing, then moving forward and turning all of the time. When the ship strikes the ice she trembles from stem to stern. We have been in the ice since 7 p.m. last night. We got into open water at 4 p.m. this afternoon. We are now going at good speed and skirting along the S.E. side of the icepack. We were in the ice 21 hours. We met the S.S. Valencia and the S.S. Senator came up behind us. The thermometer registered 25° above zero this morning. We dropped anchor in 110 ft of water at about 8 p.m.

June 12, 1900

Raised anchor at 7 a.m. and steamed ahead. Had open water until 9 a.m. when we struck the ice again. We are now pushing our way through it. The ice cakes are large but not very close together. Some of the blocks are nearly 100 ft across and about 30 ft thick. We have been getting into larger icebergs as we go north. The ice is whiter and more solid. Passed many ice blocks that stood ten feet above water and 200 feet across. Some of them are very beautiful all sorts of fantastic shapes and forms. Got into clearer water this evening. Very cold all day 26° this morning and 34° during the day. Ice in rigging all day. Water is shallow. Soundings show 50 ft to 100 ft. We got some great shakings when the old boat strikes the ice. Worse than an earthquake. She trembles from stem to stern. Today makes 22 days from Frisco.

June 13, 1900

Did not anchor last night but pushed right ahead through the ice. Our captain is getting bolder. He shoves her right through now. Engine reversing gear broke down at 5 this morning. We are in an ice pack and disabled; not a very agreeable position. The ice floes are of great size and all packed in around us. Some of the ice blocks stand 15 feet high and I judge that there is 30 to 50 ft underwater. Engines are repaired and we are pushing ahead very slowly at 9 a.m. At 11 a.m we get into smaller ice and at 12N we get into open sea. We are now going full speed. The afternoon is very beautiful. Not a cloud in sight and sun shining brightly. Came in sight of St. Lawrence Island and are now about opposite it 5:30 p.m. We are out of the ice and making fast time. We ran into the ice again at 6 p.m. off St. Lawrence Island. Steering gear broke and we are hove to for repairs. It is now 9 p.m. and the sun is shining bright and warm. Did not make much headway last night. Ice is as thick as ever.

June 14, 1900

We are still crowding our way through the ice. The ice floes are very large. We just passed one, which I estimated to be nearly 400 ft long and 150 ft wide. We are still in sight of St. Lawrence Island. We are now up against the solid ice on our port side. As far as one can see the ocean is covered with a solid sheet of ice. On our starboard the ice is broken and we are slowly pushing through it. We ran against the real thing and got stuck about 1 p.m. Got up against the frozen sea, nothing but solid ice as far as we could see. Had to turn back and retrace our course. We are now in open water and getting on course again. Open seas is ahead at 4 p.m. St. Lawrence Island is still in sight. We have now been in the ice four days. Everyone is uneasy and hoping for a clear sea. If a gale should come up we would soon be sent to the bottom, as the ice would crush our boat like an eggshell. Our position has been a dangerous one and we are probably not out of it yet. Have had a few hours of open sailing but are getting against the ice again. Land is in sight and everyone is happy. Can't tell when we will get in as the ice pack is between us and Cape Nome.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED REVISION TO POWER COST EQUALIZATION BASE AMOUNT

The REGULATORY COMMISSION OF ALASKA (Commission) gives notice that pursuant to AS 42.45.110(c)(2), it proposes to adjust the base amount for Power Cost Equalization (PCE) calculations (Docket No. U-12-073). AS 42.45.110(c)(2) provides in part:

"each year, the commission shall adjust the power costs for which power cost equalization may be paid to an electric utility based on the weighted average retail residential rate in Anchorage, Fairbanks, and Juneau..."

The current base amount is 13.42 cents per kilowatt-hour (¢/kWh). The Commission proposes to adjust the base amount to 14.30¢/kWh. The proposed 14.30¢/kWh base amount is a calculation of the weighted average cost of residential energy sales within Fairbanks, Anchorage and Juneau during calendar year 2011.

The utilities providing service to these areas during 2012 were Chugach Electric Association, Inc. (Chugach); Matanuska Electric Association, Inc. (MEA); and the Municipality of Anchorage d/b/a Municipal Light and Power Department (ML&P) in Anchorage; Golden Valley Electric Association, Inc. (GVEA) in Fairbanks; and Alaska Electric Light and Power Company (AEL&P) in Juneau. The proposed 14.30¢/kWh base amount calculations are as follows:

|---------|-------------------------------------|------------------------------------|-------------|---|---------------------------------|------------------------------|
| AEL&P | 139,936,000 | $ | 16,930,548 | $0.1210 | 14.54% | $ 0.0176 |
| Chugach | 503,211,083 | $ | 71,375,703 | $0.1418 | 52.27% | $ 0.0741 |
| GVEA | 63,427,318 | $ | 13,716,125 | $0.2162 | 6.59% | $ 0.0142 |
| MEA | 112,320,511 | $ | 16,971,042 | $0.1511 | 11.67% | $ 0.0176 |
| ML&P | 143,844,000 | $ | 18,732,524 | $0.1302 | 14.94% | $ 0.0195 |
| Total | 962,738,912 | $ | 137.725.942 | | 100.00% | $ 0.1430 |

Any interested person may present written statements or arguments relevant to the proposed action by writing to the Regulatory Commission of Alaska, 701 West Eighth Avenue, Suite 300, Anchorage, Alaska 99501, so that comments are received by June 21, 2012. Comments may also be filed electronically on the Commission's website under the public notice section via our website at:

https://rca.alaska.gov/RCAWeb/WhatsNew/PublicNoticesComments.aspx. Please reference Docket No. U-12-073 in the subject line of your comments.

In addition, a public hearing will be held on June 25, 2012, in the Commission's hearing room, 701 West Eighth Avenue, Anchorage, Alaska to consider comments on the proposed action. Individuals wishing to present oral comments at the public hearing are requested to notify the commission of that intent by June 21, 2012; however, such notification is not mandatory.

Individuals or groups of people with disabilities, who require special accommodations, auxiliary aids or service, or alternative communication formats, please contact Joyce McGowan at 276-6222, toll-free at 1-800-390-2782, or TTY (907) 276-4533 by June 15, 2012.

Additional information about the calculation of the proposed base amount may be obtained from Tariff Section Staff at the Commission's office at 701 West Eighth Avenue, Suite 300, Anchorage, Alaska 99501. The Commission's telephone number is (907) 276-6222, email address is rca.mail@alaska.gov. The Commission, after the deadline stated above, will either adopt this or other proposals dealing with the same subject without further notice, or decide to take no action on them.

Savoonga IRA Building

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Alaska District, announces the next RAB meeting for the Formerly Used Defense Site (FUDS) at Northeast Cape on St. Lawrence Island.

The main topics for this meeting are discussion of the field work scheduled for the 2012 field season at the Northeast Cape FUDS. Future activities include continued excavation of PCB and petroleum-contaminated soils at the Main Complex, removal of contaminated sediment from the Site 28 Drainage Basin, and the removal of miscellaneous poles.

Representatives from the Alaska District and the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation will be in attendance. The meeting is Thursday, June 14, at 5:30 pm, at the Savoonga IRA Building. RAB members outside of Savoonga may participate by teleconference. All RAB meetings are open to the public, and any interested community members are encouraged to attend. For additional information or a copy of the agenda please contact:

Orphaned Wildlife

The Alaska Department of Fish & Game in Nome reminds the community no one except ADF&G and the Alaska State Troopers are authorized to take orphaned wildlife into possession. Here are steps to take when coming upon orphaned wildlife during spring travel.

Do Not

- •Do Not touch, handle, or pick up any animal or bird.
- Do Not approach muskox groups. Newborn muskox calves are easily trampled and killed when groups run.
- Do Not approach cow moose and new calves. Cow moose can be aggressive and dangerous.

Do

- Report the location, type, and behavior of animal that appears orphaned to wildlife officials.
- •Avoid approaching or touching animals or birds that appear orphaned. It is illegal and may result in a fine up to $10,000 & one year in jail.

Help protect wildlife and yourself!

During the past few weeks as spring has cycled through and the snow has recede have all started to experience 'summer'. There are a few things that can help us all stay safe. First, remember that we live on the border of wilderness. Wild animals do live with us in our community. Please give musk ox and other animals respect and recognize that any animal can be dangerous. Second, though the long hours of daylight can be deceptive, remember that the City of Nome does have a curfew for persons under the age of 18. Curfew is 12 Midnight and will be enforced. Please help us keep night and will be enforced. Please help us keep your children safe by insuring persons under 18 are where they should be and in before curfew. Finally, the ATVs are out and about! The City of Nome allows ATVs to be driven on City roadways by persons who are 16 years of age or older AND who have a valid driver's license. Helmet use is recommended and there in no provision for carrying passengers on ATVs unless the vehicle is specifically designed to carry passengers. Riding on racks or on the back of ATVs in not allowed.

In the event that you witness a crime or In the event that you witness a crime or something that looks out-of-place, please immediately report any suspicious circumstances to the Nome Police at 443-5262. Any description of the suspicious person(s) will help us to identify them. If you are the victim of theft, please notify as immediately as the sooner we know about your loss, the sooner we can start working on recovering your property.

Thank you for your help in promoting safety and in reducing crime in our community.

For first time ever, Diomede slated to receive regular passenger service

By Diana Haecker

A relatively small line item of $200,000 in the state's budget is about to bring something to Little Diomede that the community never had before: scheduled passenger air service between the mainland and the island. In addition to the state's money, the federal Dept. of Transportation Essential Air Services program will chip in the matching $200,000 and thus subsidize regularly scheduled passenger air service teenage son from the Coeur d'Arlene area in northern Idaho. Maness said he has been flying helicopters for the Army and commercial companies for 31 years. Last year, Maness spent the summer fighting wildfires in Fairbanks from the air.

Evergreen started their mail run in the last week of May and offers passenger service again on a mail-first basis. A round-trip ticket from Nome to Diomede and back costs $800, a one-way trip between Diomede and Nome costs $400 and a one-way trip between Wales and Diomede costs $200.

The cost of the subsidized passenger service is yet to be determined as are the particulars of when the service will be offered, said Mosley.

Mosley as well as Scott Ruby with the state said that the matter is on an expedited track to accelerate that Diomede residents can enjoy regularly scheduled service as soon as possible. Of course, weather pendto the remote island. That is of course if weather conditions allow.

So far, Little Diomede residents only have passenger service when the sea freezes and allows the construction of an ice runway for commercial bush planes to land and take off. For the rest of the year, the island is serviced by helicopter to bring in mail and other goods. On a space available basis Evergreen, the helicopter company, takes passengers on board, but mail always has priority over passengers. This means that getting off the island is easier than getting back home as mail is taking up most of the space inside.

Bill Mosley, spokesman for the federal Dept. of Transportation said that this is the first time the DOT and a state split the cost to subsidize passenger service under the Essential Air Service program, also known as EAS. The EAS originated in the late 1970s when airlines were deregulated and in order to assure that smaller communities still receive regular passenger service, the federal government subsidized the service with the EAS. However, Little Diomede never had regular passenger service and the EAS did not apply until a change was made in recent years. "This recent provision allowed that kind of state-federal match to a community that was not eligible under the regular EAS program," Mosley said.

The state budgeted the money under the Dept. of Community, Commerce and Economic Development's division of community and regional affairs. DCRA director Scott Ruby said that the division now waits for Kawerak Inc. to determine how much they will deduct from the grant to cover administrative costs as Kawerak has been driving the effort to get regular air service established for Little Diomede. Senator Donnie Olson added the $200,000 to the state's FY13 budget and the line item survived the Governor's red pen.

The federal EAS program will administer the grant. Once Kawerak has determined its cut and sends a letter to the state, the state will prepare the paperwork to convey the money to the federal DOT EAS program after the beginning of the new fiscal year on July 1. The federal DOT, holding the money in escrow, will then issue a request for proposals and take bids of helicopter companies interested in doing the job. Once a company is chosen to deliver the service, the DOT pays out the subsidies to the helicopter service.

Evergreen already has the U.S. mail contract and operates the only twin-engine helicopter in Nome capable of flying across the water to Little Diomede. Evergreen hired a new pilot to be permanently located in Nome. The pilot, Mike Maness, moved to Nome with his wife and

Gold seekers raise census for West Beach tent city

By Sandra L. Medearis

The on and off on-again, off-again, -on-again Nome Gold Alaska camp is on again and beginning to have a census as tents pop up in the beach grass.

The Nome Planning Commission gave preliminary approval on a conditional land use permit for the camp when it met June 5. Final approval will occur after another meeting for public comment and after NGA Business Development Manager Mitch Erickson assures the Council he has achieved work orders that he has in progress: a map of the layout, installation of temporary toilets and garbage receptacles.

Bureaucracy delayed the campground plan when Erickson had to resubmit his conditional use application on a newly designed form. On top of that, cold weather slowed the company in working a large pile of pay dirt that had to go before the campground could open.

Commissioners expressed concern that there be garbage and sanitation at the least. Erickson told them he has facilities for both on the way. As it stands, some campers have jumped the gun and were setting up Monday.

Ian Canale and Zack Hammond were setting up Monday on a knoll where the historic behemoth Dredge 6 looks like it is in their backyard.

Both men have hands still sterile of ever touching gold. They are both living the dream and so far, having a good time.

Canale, from South Jersey, made a fire circle with big stones he and Hammond hauled up the rise earlier that morning. This is his first visit to Alaska

"It's crazy! I'm trying to sleep and it is light all night!"

Canale was working as a chef when the summer slump hit the restaurant where he worked.

"I kind of volunteered to be laid off. I want to see what I can do out here," Canale said. "I've watched some gold shows. I've always wanted to do it."

Hammond, from Oak Harbor, Washington, sat nearby munching off a bag of Skittles.

Ice stops herring roe fishery

By Laurie McNicholas

The 2012 Norton Sound commercial sac roe fishery has been cancelled due to extensive ice cover in the sound, according to a press release issued Monday afternoon by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

"After much consideration of evolving ice conditions in the Norton Sound herring fishing grounds as well as transit areas in the Bering Sea, NSEDC has agreed with Icicle Seafoods to cancel the planned operations for the 2012 Norton Sound sac roe herring fishery and to release the Icicle Seafoods-owned processing vessel Robert M. Thorstenson and its accompanying tenders, which have been standing by at Nunivak Island for the ice to clear for their transit to the Norton Sound, on to other fishery operations," the release

"Ice has prevented the processor and tenders from reaching the Norton Sound region for over a week, and with ice now breaking loose from southern Norton Sound and further south, large pans and bergs have accumulated on the Norton Sound herring fishing grounds, hindering any fishing opportunity," the release continues. "National Weather Service forecasts show west winds becoming north through Friday, which would only exacerbate the ice problem....

"NSEDC will now work to finalize alternative plans to harvest and process herring for use as bait in the 2012 Norton Sound red king crab and halibut fisheries," adds the release. "If ice and timing conditions allow it, herring will be processed in local facilities. Announcements will be made as plans become finalized for these operations."

NSEDC biologist Wes Jones described ice conditions he observed in an aerial survey from Stuart Island to Cape Denbigh June 10 in an email to Jim Menard, the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, and agement Strategies, projects salmon returns and outlines fisheries management plans for each Norton Sound subdistrict and the Port Clarence district. Following is a summary of the report beginning with projected returns of Chinook, chum, pink, coho and sockeye salmon to the Norton Sound region.

A weak Chinook salmon run is expected, and no commercial fishery targeting Chinook is anticipated. Subsistence restrictions for Chinook are possible in southern Norton Sound.

Average chum salmon runs are expected. Buyer interest in chum salmon has increased in recent years, and the harvest could be 70,000 to 100,000 fish. The only expected subsistence restrictions for chum salmon are in the Nome subdistrict and the Pilgrim River and Kuzitrin River drainages where catch limits will be in effect.

The department expects the pink salmon run to be average. Based on buyer interest, the harvest could be 300,000 to 600,000 pinks. The department expects to establish directed fishing periods for pinks in all subdistricts.

An average coho salmon run is projected, with a commercial catch of 60,000 to 90,000 fish. No subsistence fishing restrictions are anticipated, except for catch limits in the Nome subdistrict and the Pilgrim River and Kuzitrin River drainages.

In the Port Clarence district, the department expects the commercial

OUT OF GAS—Bonanza Fuel truck filled up with unleaded gasoline from competitor Crowley Petroleum's bulk fuel tanks on West Second Avenue several times June 7 and 8. Bonanza ran out because last summer's fuel delivery fell short, according to Jason Evans, chairman of Sitnasuak Native Corp. The Russian ice-class tanker Renda and USCG icebreaker Healy fetched unleaded gas from Dutch Harbor in January, but not enough. Evans expects the first fuel barge to arrive about June 18.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

I agree with what Joe Garnie said in last week's paper. Why were we not notified that the management of the Teller reindeer herd was going to someone outside of Teller?

We never really agreed with the management the herd had for the past five or six years but the Teller herders and Teller workers pulled together to keep the reindeer healthy and the population growing.

I am the last living nephew of Johnny Kakaruk, original owner of the Kakaruk herd in the Teller area. Why was I one of the last to hear that there was going to be a big change in management?

Our grandpa John Kakaruk, Sr. had a huge reindeer herd in the 1920s. His range was in the Kuzitrin-Kougarok area. He got his start from the Lomen brothers at the place known to us as "Plant."

His herd grew to 14,000 head but in the 1930s half of the herd was taken away by caribou. The other half would probably have been taken away but they were being used for the movie "The Eskimo" or "Mala." The reindeer posed as caribou. As the years went by the caribou slowly took the rest of the herd away until grandpa had nothing left. Grandpa and his sons, John Kakaruk Jr.-"Papa John," our dad David Kakaruk and Johnny Kakaruk were active reindeer herders.

Uncle Johnny got his start in 1949 after borrowing 500 head from the

Once again caribou tried to take the herd away several times, so the Kakaruk brothers decided to move the herd to a new location on the Teller side. The have remained there Occasional caribou have wandered into the reindeer herd but since the herders were always on their toes, they got rid of the caribou.

To those of us growing up eating reindeer, there is a big difference in taste between reindeer and caribou.

Reindeer have fat on the outside and caribou have fat inside. When we eat it, it leaves a waxy feeling in our mouth, so we prefer reindeer.

OPINION

We were taught to respect and take care of the reindeer. Reindeer herding is a full time job. There should never be anything in the way to distract the management all year long. My cousin Wilfred may have been distracted at times but whenever possible he camped out with the reindeer herd for days at a time.

A few weeks before Wilfred passed on, we were talking about moving the corral to a new location because "Canyon" was showing signs of sinking.

The reindeer were beginning to show that they were afraid of the last entrance to the corral. Wilfred and I decided maybe "Tisuk" would be the best area for a new corral.

We were taught never to interfere with someone else's business until they asked for help.

On several occasions Millie Lee or Wilfred came to me for a problem they had. I promised them that anytime they needed help I would step in. Since they are both gone I feel I should say something now.

We should talk as elders and adults especially now, concerning the reindeer and not just have a childish

After 74 years there should be a record of all reindeer herders who lost their herds to caribou. I met several of them in the 1940s and I know lots of them today.

How many herds are grazing in their original grazing area and not being monitored hundreds of miles away by a radio collar.

Please let's all behave like human adults.

There should be a meeting with everyone in Teller before a final decision for new management is made.

We should be present to watch the faces of those who made a quick decision for a new manager.

Thank you.

Norbert O. Kakaruk Teller, AK, 99778

Compromise is Not Evil

The Alaska Republican Party's convention feuding and fighting has this ol' moderate Democrat feeling kind of smug. After all, the recent Democratic State convention was a prime example of cohesive and inclusive concepts and the ability to work together. What has happened to the Grand Ol' Party? They kicked out Senator Richard Luger, the Senate's longest serving Republican because he was too ready to compromise with the Democrats. The Tea Party fringe is shredding the Republican Party.

The GOP was at one time committed to what's best for the nation. At one time they were able to work with the opposition. At one time they could collaborate and cooperate to put the country before partisanship. No more. It's my way or the highway. It is ideologically extreme, refuses to compromise, and is unmoved by facts, evidence and science. How did the GOP take such an extreme right turn? Who's the money behind this? The Tea Party folks say we were a nation born from a tax revolt and opposition to government. They want no government. Actually our nation's founders opposed the oppressive rule of King George III and advocated self-government, not no government. Oh, the truth is so limiting.

Our politicians, both Republicans and Democrats have to realize that America is made up of a mix of rugged individualists who have made it on their own and community spirited folks who organize and volunteer to help their neighbors and serve their communities as volunteer firefighters, ambulance personnel, community organizers and cupcake bakers. How do we restore balance? We must take the initiative and not vote for politicians who see no value in common goals and think that compromise is the tool of the devil. -N.L.M.-

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk Rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are preserved forever as his legacy in the "Mc-Daniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

This diary was painstakingly transcribed & proofed by museum staff from the original three by five inch journal book kept in Wilfred's pocket throughout the summer of 1900. Once again, the spelling errors are all his!

In 1898, the Three Lucky Swedes discovered gold at Anvil Creek. Over the next winter, miners left the Canadian Klondike

New faces in physical therapy

"The job actually brought me here," Oesterritter said. He is the chiropractor at Arctic Chiropractic. Oesterritter was a student and worked selling chemicals and lab supplies before coming to Nome.

Dr. Oesterritter grew up in Louisville, Ky. He stayed in the state to study undergraduate German and international economics at the University of Kentucky. He later attended New York Chiropractic College in Seneca Falls, N.Y. "The birthplace of women's rights," he tit-Arkell is originally from Tacoma, Wash., where she got her certification. She has been a practicing massage therapist for almost two years.

She is also certified in advanced sports massage.

Both Oesterritter and Arkell like to fish. Oesterritter said that fishing was part of the draw of Nome. "I'm just getting into it," he said.

Arkell lit up when she talked about fishing. "My kids are up here for the summer, so we're definitely going to be fishing a lot," she said.

The Arctic Chiropractic duo sees people of all ages, Arkell said, "young and old." They will even work on pregnant women.

When something is out of place, everything seems a little off, Oesterritter said. Chiropractic work can often solve painful problems, fore-

MREs to get here from Seattle?," he asked. "Three or four days?"

A reporter paused for dramatic effect. "Buy a bunch more Skittles," she said.

Hammond, a commercial cardholding diver, had just got off the airplane that morning and had yet to unpack.

"I didn't come up here to get rich," he said. "I'm camping for three months in Alaska. Who gets to do that? All my friends are envious."

Hammond has experienced diving all over the world in the oil business, he said. Now he will try Norton Sound, going for the gold."

"I've had an amazing life. This is another chapter," Hammond said, wadding up the Skittles bag.

As of June 5, Erickson had not set an exact price for throwing bags and tent down on gold company ground. He's thinking about $600 per year. Shipping containers are OK, tents OK, school busses OK, and neat sheds, OK. Pallet-and-tarp shacks are definitely not OK. The fee includes access and the right to pan the sand on NGA land at West Beach. Nome expects a drove of miners to arrive to try their luck at the state recreational mining areas offshore of West Beach and East Beach, as well as gold seekers who prevailed in a September 2011 offshore lease tract sale.

Erickson assured the planning panel that he was giving notice to current owners and inhabitants of shack town on West Beach that their structures had to be squared away by fall and, he hoped, moved above the beach.

"It is our intent to get everyone up to code. We have to give them some time," Erickson said. "We have to follow process."

City law requires certain notice for public comment on land use issues. The meeting to consider final approval of the camp is on the schedule for a meeting June 21. Notices for conditional use permit hearings need to go to property owners of record within 300 feet of the subject property with 14 days' notice.

The commission and Erickson agreed on approval for one year. The campground will close Oct. 15, with no permanent structures remaining, but perhaps some equipment storage.

"A campground is not in our longrange plans," he said. "This is a community service. We'll try to run it as cleanly as possible."

Commissioners commented that they would rather see people camping up by Dredge 6 west of town than have uncontrolled camping willy-nilly up and down the beaches.

"...A little under 100 tons of herring were observed in the Point Dexter area with no herring off shore coming in from the deep," wrote Jones. "The bad news is that more ice has move into eastern Norton Sound, and the wind has switched to northwest. All the shorefast ice is now breaking off in large chunks. At Stuart Island the ice extends from shore out about 25 miles and continues to the south. Looking north of Stuart Island to Cape Darby, ice extends from shore out about 35 miles (less than 10 miles of open water between Cape Darby and ice edge).

"Everything is ice covered above 80 percent south of Egavik directly west," Jones continued. "As you move offshore, this ice edge works north until it is about 10 miles south of Cape Darby. From Egavik to Cape Denbigh there is a 5 to 10 mile band of ice along shore at different concentrations. Ice has begun working its way north offshore on the west side of Cape Denbigh. Currently the ocean area from Stuart Island to Cape Darby to Cape Denbigh is easily over 50 percent ice cover[ed], and my estimate is between 60 to 70 percent covered. Unalakleet is now iced in, and Shaktoolik is quickly becoming iced in. We are currently having northwest winds. I expect the ice situation to continue to get worse."

Land exchange finalized

By Amelia Cooper

"This is a good day for the residents of the Bering Straits region," congressman Don Young said last Wednesday.

On June 6, the House passed the Salmon Lake Land Selection Resolution Act, ratifying a land agreement to convey over 14 thousand acres of land in the Salmon Lake, Windy Cove, and Imuruk Basin areas to the Bering Straits Native Corporation.

The Bureau of Land Management will continue to own the nine-acre Salmon Lake campground.

The Senate passed the bill Oct 18 last year. The president's signature, anxiously awaited by many, will finalize the bill's status as more than just an archival entry in the Library of Congress.

Four years in the making: The bill has been floating around the legislature since Sept 29, 2008. It has died twice, and both times was re-introduced in the following congressional session.

The Salmon Lake Land Selection Resolution Act is just one step in a much longer process. "The entitlements created by the Statehood Act, ANCSA, and the Native Allotment Act have resulted in a tangled web of interests vying for a finite amount of land," Legislative Attorney Nathan Brooks said in a 2005 CRS Report on the Alaska Land Transfer Acceleration Act.

In 1958—the year before Alaska became a state—the Alaska State- hood Act allowed the State to choose around 104 million acres of federal land to own. Alaska Natives argued that the selections that overlapped Native lands obtained through the 1906 Alaska Native Allotment Act were invalid, and in 1969 the Court of Appeals Ninth Circuit ruled in their favor. Uncertain sizes and borders of the Native lands made land selection a challenge.

In 1971, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act was passed. ANCSA repealed the Allotment Act and annulled claims to land obtained through it, but offered a trade. The State was permitted to build a pipeline through land that had previously been owned by Alaska Natives, and offered $963 million and 44 million acres of land (to be selected) in return. This was distributed through regional and village corporations.

ANCSA created a corporate structure for boundaries to be set on Native lands. Native Corporations were established, and land applications were created for the corporations to file with the BLM. BSNC was formed for the Bering Strait region, which includes most of the Seward Peninsula, in 1972. It is one of 13 regional corporations.

Over 40 years later, overlapping claims like those in the Salmon Lake area are still an issue.

"The enactment of this bill shows that all sides are capable of compromise," Senator Lisa Murkowski said. Murkowski sponsored the bill.

and streamed into this area mushing dog teams, walking and even riding bikes down the frozen Yukon River to the Bering Sea. By the summer of 1899 all the creeks had been staked. In late July 1899, when we were called Anvil City, there were hundreds of frustrated miners with no ground to dig. As luck would have it, as the story goes, one of the soldiers who was here to help keep the peace, ran his hand through the beach sands and found GOLD! There was gold on the beach!

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget Newspaper, the steamship Zealandia was within eyesight of Nome. The indomitable icepack was all that separated the gold seekers from their final destination – the golden beaches of Nome . . .

June 15, 1900

Here we are at last pulling into the anchorage at Nome. It is now 4 a.m. The Zealandia makes the 20th vessel in. As far as one can see the beach is lined with tents. It is a dreary looking place. Hills are covered with snow. Sledge Island is astern on the port side. It is now 9:20 a.m. and the rush to land is on full blast. The S.S. Ohio has small pox on board and has been sent to St. Michael in quarantine. The report is that she buried 25 at sea.

Went ashore this morning at 10 a.m. Had a lively time getting ashore. The company landed us in dories. The sea was rough and we had lots of excitement getting through the surf. Mining is going on all down the beach. We are camped on the tundra and it is raining. All of our stuff is on board the Zealandia and we don't know when we will get it. We are in a tent belonging to Mr. Phillips. We have nothing to eat except some bread and meat, which we took from the Zeal. Had quite an experience this morning while we were making camp a neighboring house built of wood and canvas, took fire. We all turned into a fire brigade and went to the rescue. We fired out the things till we were driven out. Then the crowd took hold of our side and turned the house upside down and extinguished the fire and saved the contents by cutting through the floor. We have a poor place to camp but are very thankful for shelter, as rain has been falling all afternoon.

We are now sitting around a stove in one of the gambling houses. It is a great comfort to what we have had for the past 24 days. We have been 24 days and 13 hours from S.F. and 5 days 17 hours from Dutch Harbor. We were in the ice 4 days. I heard that there were two cases of small-fishery to remain closed, but the sockeye salmon run to continue to improve.

Nome subdistrict

Commercial fishing for chum salmon is closed by regulation in Nome subdistrict. Commercial fishing for pink salmon is expected in late July or early August in periods of no more than 24 hours and with mesh size restricted to 4 ½ inches or less. Depending on run strength, commercial fishing for coho salmon may occur in August in periods of no more than 24 hours of Cape Nome. If either the Nome or Snake River with mesh size weir counts project that the chum escapement restricted to 6 goal range will not be reached, marine fishing peinches or less.

Subsistence fishing for chum salmon is expected to be similar to last year with no Tier II fishing restrictions, because the chum salmon surplus above escapement needs is expected to exceed the amount necessary for subsistence (ANS). All subsistence salmon fishermen will require Tier I permits.

be closed.

In marine waters, subsistence fishing is allowed 7 days a week prior to June 15 and after August 15. The marine waters of the subdistrict will be open to set gillnet fishing June 15 through July 25 from 6 p.m. Wednesday until 6 p.m. Saturday, and July 26 through August 15 from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Saturday.

In fresh waters, subsistence fishing is open 7 days a week prior to June 15 and after August 31. From June 15 through August 31, subsistence set gillnet fishing will be open from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday.

All state residents are eligible to receive a Tier I subsistence permit. The fishing schedule listed above will be in effect unless reduced or closed by emergency order because of weaker than expected salmon runs. Fishing time in marine waters may be extended if weather prevents subsistence fishermen from setting nets in the ocean. The ADF&G expects to allow beach seining in June during gillnet fishing periods. Additional beach seining periods may be allowed in July and August depending on escapement counts. Marine and streamspecific harvest limits are listed in the subsistence salmon fishing permits or the attachment given to subsistence fishermen at the same time the permit is issued.

The department will use the Eldorado River weir counts as an indicator of chum salmon run strength in the Nome subdistrict east of Cape Nome. The Eldorado River chum salmon escapement is expected to be met, and early escapement counts from the weir will be used to confirm that the run is tracking as expected.

The department will use the Nome River and rado Snake River escapement counts as indicators of River chum run strength in the Nome subdistrict west salmon escapement begins riods will be suspended, and fresh water fishing to lag in the river with lagging escapement counts will behind historical run timing curves and indicates that the escapement goal range will not be met, marine fishing periods will be suspended as well as fishing periods in the river.

The Eldorado River weir counts will be used as index for escapement for the Flambeau, Bonanza and Solomon rivers, and aerial surveys will be used to confirm that escapement is sufficient on those rivers. If aerial survey counts show escapement to be lagging, fresh water fishing periods will be suspended.

The department will use the Nome River and Snake River escapement counts as indicators of chum run strength in the Nome subdistrict west of Cape Nome. If either the Nome or Snake River weir counts project that the chum escapement goal range will not be reached, marine fishing periods will be suspended, and fresh water fishing in the river with lagging escapement counts will be closed.

The Cripple and Penny Rivers are closed by regulation to subsistence chum salmon fishing.

A good chum salmon run is anticipated in the Sinuk River, and sockeye salmon escapement to Glacial Lake is expected to improve compared to recent years.

Golovin subdistrict

The Golovin subdistrict experienced good commercial chum salmon fishing in 2010 and 2011, but a chum run below average is expected this year. Therefore, the department will be cautious about allowing any commercial chum salmon fishing time unless the adjacent Elim subdistrict shows a good chum run or escapement counts at the Niukluk River indicate the lower escapement goal of 23,000 chum salmon will be reached.

The department expects average pink salmon and coho salmon runs to be strong enough to allow commercial harvests and reach escapement goals

Permits are required for subsistence salmon fishing, and no restrictions in subsistence fishing time are anticipated. The coho salmon run is expected to reach the escapement goal of range of 2,400-7,200 fish past the Niukluk River tower. In most years of the last decade, the subsistence harvest of coho in the subdistrict was estimated at less than 15 percent of

Elim subdistrict

In 2010 the Elim subdistrict's commercial fishing boundaries were expanded from Bald Head to Carson Creek near Cape Darby. No commercial fishing is expected for Chinook salmon because escapement is expected to fall below the high end of the escapement goal, which ranges from 300 to 550 fish.

Commercial fishing for chum and pink salmon is anticipated, but chum salmon fishing may be delayed until July depending on escapement numbers. A commercial pink salmon directed fishery can occur if subsistence needs and chum salmon escapement goals are projected to be met, or after July 6 if there is a harvestable surplus of pink salmon, and if a directed pink salmon commercial fishery will not have a significant impact on the escapement or subsistence use of chum salmon. An average pink salmon run is expected. Commercial coho salmon openings are likely due to an expected average run.

No subsistence salmon fishing restrictions have occurred in the Elim subdistrict in more than 20 years, and none are expected in 2012. Permits are required for subsistence salmon fishing in the sub-

Norton Bay subdistrict

Commercial salmon fishing returned to the Norton Bay subdistrict in 2008 after 10 years without a buyer, and commercial fishing has occurred each year since. Inseason escapement monitoring indices for this subdistrict were not available in previous years, and the department used information from nearby subdistricts to determine if commercial fishing time was warranted. However, in 2011 the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. operated a counting tower on the Inglutalik River, and the department plans to use salmon escapement counts from the project as an index and comparison with other projects in 2012. Chum, pink and coho salmon directed commercial fisheries are likely if there is market interest. No subsistence restrictions are expected.

Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts

The Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts will be managed as one fishery because past studies have shown salmon bound for these subdistricts intermingle and that harvests in one subdistrict most likely will affect the other. If there is a sufficient salmon surplus for commercial fishing, a fishery will occur. However, no commercial fishing is expected for Chinook salmon due to recent poor runs and poor parent-year escapements.

Chum and pink salmon will be targeted if there is market interest. A chum fishery would likely occur after June to allow more time for Chinook salmon to pass through the subdistricts. Commercial fishing for chum in June is a possibility if the Chinook run is projected to reach escapement goals with no additional subsistence fishing closures. The department will switch to coho salmon management in late July, and a commercial fishery is expected.

The timing and abundance of the Chinook salmon run will be monitored by department personnel through interviews with subsistence fishermen, a new marine test fish project targeting Chinook, and passage estimates from a tower located on the North River, an important Chinook spawning tributary in the Unalakleet River drainage.

The escapement goal range for the North River is 1,200-2,600 Chinooks, and the aerial survey escapement goal range for the Unalakleet River and Old Woman River index area is 550-1,100 Chinooks. For a Chinook salmon directed commercial fishery to occur, the department must project escapement of at least 1,900 Chinooks past the North River tower

A subsistence fishing schedule will take effect June 15 in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts to protect Chinook salmon. The subsistence fishing schedule in the marine waters of the subdistricts will be from 6:00 p.m. Monday until 6:00 p.m. Wednesday and from 6:00 p.m. Thursday until 6:00 p.m. Saturday. The schedule in the Unalakleet River will be from 8:00 a.m. Monday until 8:00 p.m. Tuesday and from 8:00 a.m. Friday until 8:00 p.m. Saturday.

In the 2000s, the number of larger Chinook salmon reaching the spawning grounds has been in serious decline based on age and sex composition of fisheries harvests, and inriver test net and beach seine catches. Subsistence gillnet mesh size will likely be restricted to no more than 6 inches in the Unalakleet River in late June through mid-July to conserve older, larger Chinook salmon. The department may need to restrict gillnet mesh size to 6 inches or less in the marine waters of both subdistricts in late June if the Chinook run is poor.

The Alaska Board of Fisheries has approved the use of 7-inch or smaller mesh size subsistence gillnets to conserve Chinook salmon in both subdistricts. This gillnet mesh size specification may be used instead of the 6-inch mesh size restriction in 2012. A subsistence gillnet closure will occur in both subdistricts and the Unalakleet River the first weekend of July if it is projected that the North River tower Chinook salmon passage will not exceed the lower end of the escapement goal range. However, if projections show the Chinook escapement goal range will likely be met, then the subsistence fishing schedule will remain in effect through July 15 or until the escapement goal range is exceeded.

Chum and pink salmon directed commercial fishing periods are expected in July. The chum and pink salmon runs are expected to be average. In the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts, the commercial chum and pink salmon fishery may occur only if there is a harvestable surplus of pink or chum salmon and if a directed pink or chum salmon commercial fishery will not have a significant impact on escapement or subsistence use of Chinook salmon, and no earlier than July 1 if either gillnet mesh size or subsistence fishing time are restricted in the Chinook subsistence fishery.

If early projections show sufficient Chinook numbers caught in the test net and sufficient passage at the North River tower, a restricted mesh commercial opening for chum salmon is possible in June. If Chinook salmon escapements are lagging, other salmon directed fisheries may need to be delayed to minimize the Chinook harvest.

Chum salmon directed fishing periods will have gear restricted to a maximum mesh size of 6 inches, and pink salmon directed fishing periods will have gear restricted to a maximum mesh size of 4 ½ inches.

If there is sufficient run strength, coho salmon commercial fishing openings will occur as they have in recent years. The coho season begins July 25. Coho gear will be restricted to a maximum mesh size of 6 inches, and the regular 48-hour periods will be in effect if there are no escapement concerns.

Port Clarence district

A commercial fishery for sockeye salmon is not anticipated in the Port Clarence district, because the sockeye run is not expected to reach the inriver goal of 30,000 fish in the Pilgrim River. However, if the run is strong enough to reach 30,000 sockeye in the Pilgrim River and a market is available, commercial fishing time will be allowed.

Subsistence salmon fishing permits are required for the Port Clarence district, Pilgrim River drainage and Salmon Lake. Catch limits are listed on subsistence permits. The sockeye salmon run in the Pilgrim River crashed in 2009 with only 953 fish through the weir. The six years prior to 2009 had record passage ranging from 20,452 to 85,417 sockeyes.

The sockeye run was only 1,654 fish in 2010, but escapement improved to 8,449 fish in 2011. Based on the 2011 escapement and sockeye smolt outmigration data, the department expects the 2012 run to improve compared to the previous three years. The department will compare the 2012 run with historical escapement counts at the weir, and subsistence fishing restrictions may be necessary the second week of July if the run is weak.

Dark chocolate to prevent heart disease

Alaska Family Doctor

Imagine the doctor gives you a prescription and says, "Take this once a day to prevent a heart attack or stroke." Imagine the pharmacist then takes the script and hands you a large medicine bottle full of dark chocolates. It might seem like a fantastic dream come true.

But this scenario < is not too far fetched according to a recent study in the Medical British Journal (BMJ). Researchers found that daily consumption of dark chocolate could reduce the number of heart attacks in high-risk populations by as much as 85 fewer events per 10,000 people. This is important news in an age where cardiovascular disease is the leading cause of death worldwide.

Doctors can predict who will develop cardiovascular disease by looking for what is called the metabolic syndrome. The metabolic syndrome is a cluster of medical problems including high blood pressure, obesity, elevated blood sugar (pre-diabetes and diabetes), and high cholesterol. These diseases serve as warning lights that indicate an impending medical break down, like heart attack or stroke, if changes are not made.

If current trends continue, the metabolic syndrome will affect rural Alaska in epidemic proportions by the end of this decade. Experts predict that 50 percent of the population will have diabetes or pre-diabetes by the year 2020.

Obituary

Margaret Timbes Sanders

Margaret Timbes Sanders, 81, of Ft.Worth, Texas died Wednesday, June 7. In lieu of flowers, please donate to a charity of your choice. Margaret was born on Feb. 20, 1931, in Weatherford. She was the fourth child and oldest daughter of six children. Her family moved to Fort Worth, the Northside, in the mid-thirties. After World War II. her oldest brother invited her to move to Alaska where he was stationed. She accepted and met her future husband soon after she arrived. Margaret lived in Nome and Anchorage and traveled to many small villages throughout her 30-year stay. She moved back to Fort Worth in 1979. She was preceded in death by her husband, Superior Court Judge William H. Sanders; and her four brothers and sister. She is survived by daughters, Skyla Weister and husband, Telford, Marsland Sanders and partner, Jim Nitchman; grandchildren, Tasha Crouse, Bill Van Vleet, Dan Van Vleet, and Jack Van Vleet; and 11 great-grandchildren.

Over the last several years, research shows that dark chocolate in moderation helps prevent the metabolic syndrome by lowering blood pressure, reducing inflammation, moderating platelet activity, and lowering harmful blood fats. Dark chocolate may even increase a person's good (HDL) cholesterol. ALASKA The health benefits of chocolate stem FAMILY from naturally occur-DOCTOR ring compounds in the cocoa bean called flavonoids. In addition to chocolate, flavonoids are found in many plants and plant-derived foods such as blueberries, cranberries, apples, peanuts, onions, tea, and red wine. There are more than 4,000 different flavonoid compounds.

The active compound in chocolate appears to be a powerful flavonoid called epicatechin that has insulinmimicking effects, reduces vesselinflammation, and damaging promotes heart health. Research shows that the heart-protective benefits of the flavonoids in dark chocolate appear within two hours of consumption.

Not all chocolate has the same Cocoa is the healthy benefit. flavonoid-rich ingredient in choco-

Therefore dark chocolate, which has a higher cocoa concentration, is considered more beneficial than milk chocolate, which has a higher proportion of sugar and saturated fats. Furthermore, dark chocolate is processed in a way that preserves up to 95 percent of the flavonoid content.

To make the most of the heart healthy effects of dark chocolate, eating chocolate should not take the place of daily exercise, a nutritious diet, and taking medication as prescribed. However, when choosing a dessert or light snack, adding a little dark chocolate may have its place in protecting your heart and brain.

According to the BMJ study, around 118 people would need to eat 3.5 ounces of dark chocolate daily for 10 years to prevent one person from having a cardiovascular event.

This compares favorably with other recommended forms of prevention for people who have not yet had a heart attack or stroke. Between 60 and 268 people need to take a cholesterol medicine every day for five years to prevent one heart attack or stroke. Over 1600 people must take an aspirin a day for a year to prevent one cardiovascular event. Therefore the idea of consuming dark chocolate as a part of an overall heart-healthy prevention program is not too far fetched

If an apple a day keeps the doctor away, perhaps dipping the apple in a dark chocolate sauce will keep the cardiologist and neurologist away

Saying It Sincerely

By Rev. Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran Church Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Do not remember the former things or consider the things of old. I am about to do a new thing; now it springs forth, do you not perceive it? I will make a way in the wilderness and rivers in the desert." Isaiah 43: 18 -19

"Look how green it is; seems like it turned green just over night." That was the comment from the back seat of the car I was driving on the road between Nome and Teller. Indeed the hills were stunning – lush with green, tiny blossoms of white and pink just beginning to peek their heads out of the tundra. Incredulous, we wondered aloud how did this happen so fast?

"Re-creation": God is continually making things new. Birds have flown here from far away distances, making their nests, hatching new life. A young boy catches his first fish and shares it with an elder. New life is all around us. And we too, God's people, can be changed overnight as we benefit from God's Word and grace. Our attitudes, our relationships can be made brand

Though we may have heard a scripture or idea before, when we hear God's Word, it brings something new to us each time. After all, God is offering us new life. New possibilities come to us in God's Word as sure as the sun and rains bring greenness to the Nome hills. In baptism we are promised that we have been made a new creation. Death, sin and the evil one have no permanent hold over those who believe

According to scripture (Genesis 3) in the story of the human fall, our tendency is to discount our brokenness and need for God—deny, hide and blame others for our failures and wounds. But the path to healing and forgiveness is always facing, admitting, confessing our problems. God is merciful and sees us just as we are and offers a new way, his way of mercy is the road in

Recently at Vacation Bible School we spoke of Moses. He had been saved as an infant from Pharaoh. Later God would call Moses to bring the Hebrew people out of slavery and Pharaoh's cruelty. A young boy raised his hand at church and asked, "but wasn't Moses the one who murdered someone?" Indeed he did. Yet God used Moses to help people despite the grievous and terrible thing he had done. Moses asked God "who am I that I should go to Pharaoh and bring the Israelites out of Egypt? God said, "I will be with you." (Exodus 3: 11-12)

The bark Alaska is a total wreck on the beach here. She went to pieces in a gale and her bulk is still showing above the water. The ship Katherin Sudden is also a wreck. She was deserted in the ice and her crew and passengers rescued by the U.S. Cutter "Bear." Her hull was picked up and towed to Nome. She has lost her masts and rigging and had her bow

We were beaten to Nome by boats that were in Dutch Harbor when we left.

We got into the ice and had to make the best of it. We are all very thankful to get through as it was and none want to go through the experience again, but now that it is over, I would not have missed it, as it is the experience of a lifetime. Met Al. Raney today. He arrived here from Dawson via St. Michael today. We have no place to sleep tonight. Can't sleep in the tent as the ground is soaking wet and we cannot get our cots, as the baggage has not been sent ashore. Expect to be up all night, unless we strike a sleeping place.

Found a good sleeping place for the night. Took lodging in the steamer Minneapolis and had a warm place to sleep. Had a good breakfast. The baggage is now ashore and we will soon set up our camp. The weather is pleasant today and the sea is calm, so that the landing of baggage is easy.

Today is Sunday. Everybody is working as usual. We are not doing anything except what must be done. Got the last of our freight this afternoon. Weather turned very cold and raining. We have written some letters today. First chance we have had to write.

We are not doing much except rest and eat. Do not feel very strong. Took a long walk on the beach west of Nome City. Looked at some pumps in operation. Lots of greenhorns at work on the beach. Today is the finest day we have had. Sun shone very warm all forenoon and made it very pleasant. We ran the rocker for 3 or so hours and made $3. Another man was killed downtown this morning. Many people are already getting disgusted and leaving for Golofvin Bay district There is a rumor of a strike over there. The beach is what I expected it was. There is lots of gold in it, but it won't pay for rockering and 90 percent of the men here came expecting to rock and are not equipped for everything else.

The issuance of citations or the act of arrest does not assign guilt to any identified party. On 6-4 7:31 a.m. NPD responded to a reported suspected drunk driver who nearly struck two pedestrians on 3rd Avenue. The vehicle and driver were contacted in the parking lot of the AC Store. Investigation resulted in the arrest of Jeremiah Moriarty, 25, of Nome for Driving Under the Influence of Alcohol. Moriarty was taken to AMCC where he was remanded on charges of DUI and Refusalt Sulpmit to a Breath Test Reil was set at Refusal to Submit to a Breath Test. Bail was set at $2,000. On 6-4 at 11:15 a.m. NPD received a report of a missing person. D.A. was last seen the evening before and had not made contact with her family or contacted her child who was with family mem bers. NPD began an immediate investigation ulti-mately leading to the recovery of the missing person. NPD wishes to take this opportunity to thank all of the concerned members of the community that called in and provided information that helped us make sure the missing person was

On 6-4 at 10:57 p.m., NPD responded to Norton Sound Regional Hospital to a report that a patient at the hospital was assaulting medical care givers. Investigation resulted in the arrest of Eric Pushruk, 30, of Teller being arrested for several counts of Assault in the Fourth Degree and Viola-tion of Conditions of Probation. Pushruk was re-ported to have been involved in an ATV accident outside of Nome and had been brought to the hospital for treatment of his injuries. He was medically cleared and taken to AMCC where he was re-cleared and taken to AMCC where he was re-manded. As Pushruk was reportedly intoxicated at the time of the ATV incident, the DUI information was forwarded to AST for investigation. On 6-5 at 1:54 a.m., NPD responded to the Norton Sound Regional Hostel to a report that a client at that location was intoxicated and had a 2year-old child in her care. Investigation resulted in the arrest of Tiffany Slwooko, 30, of Gambell for Violation of Conditions of Probation. Slwooko was transported to AMCC where she was remanded to custody. The child was placed with a responsible

On 6-5 at 3:45 a.m., NPD responded to a call at a residence on 5th Avenue. Information indicated that there was an intoxicated 16-year-old at that location that was causing a disturbance. Investigation resulted in the arrest of the minor for Disorderly Conduct and Assault in the Fourth Degree. The juvenile was transported to the Nome Youth Facility where she was remanded. The ju-venile was also issued a citation for Minor Consuming Alcohol.

On 6-5 at 5:31 a.m., NPD responded to a reported aggressive musk ox in Icy View. NPD was able to convince the animal to move away from structures using noise diversion devices. NPD would like to remind citizens that we live in a wilderness area and to be vigilant about wild ani mals as they can present a significant public safety risk.

On 6-5 at 6:44 a.m. NPD received a report of a missing juvenile. Investigation was immediately conducted which determined that the juvenile was missing from an area outside of the city. The Alaska State Troopers were contacted and advised of the circumstances and were in the process of launching a Search and Rescue operation when the juvenile was found. Again, NPD expresses gratitude to all the citizens who called in with information to assist us in this case.

On 6-5 at 11:12 p.m. hours, NPD received a report of an assault that occurred on 5th Avenue. NPD investigation resulted in the arrest of Thomas Asila, 27, of Nome for Assault in the Third Degree(Felony); Violating Conditions of Probation; and Criminal Mischief. Asila was arrested and taken to AMCC where he was remanded. The juvenile victim in this case received minor injuries and a bicycle was damaged in the event.

On 6-6 at 2:30 a.m., NPD responded to a report that a person was damaging a vehicle on Spokane Street. Investigation resulted in the arrest of James Longley, 23, of Nome for Criminal Mischief in the Third Degree and Criminal Trespass in the Second Degree. Longley was transported to AMCC where he was remanded to cutoted. Degree to the vehicle were estimated in custody. Damage to the vehicle was estimated in excess of $500

On 6-6 at 4:16 a.m. NPD responded to a report that there was a person on the ground behind a business on Front Street. NPD contacted two persons at that location. One was transported to the hospital for evaluation due to excess alcohol consumption. The second, Christy Apangalook, 19, was issued a citation for Minor Consuming Alcohol. Apangalook was released at the scene. On 6-7 at 12:33 a.m., NPD received a report

Notice from Chief J. Papasodora

Notice from Chief J. Papasodora
Looking through the media release for this past week, the incidence of intoxicated people; both adults and minors; is increasing. Aside from the obvious medical issues created from excess alcohol consumption, this behavior creates an entirely different set of risk factors for all persons who consume alcohol to excess and those around them

Alaska has the highest rates of domestic vio-lence and sexual assault/sexual abuse in the US, a fact that is driving Governor Parnell to engage the citizens of the State to 'Choose Respect.' In Nome, almost all incidents the Nome Police respond to are alcohol related. Nearly every sexual assault reported in Nome involves a victim who has been incapacitated by excess consumption of alcohol. Many of these victims do not report because they don't remember what happened. Some don't report because they aren't old enough to drink and fear getting in trouble for underage drinking. Regardless, they are people — who have been victimized by another who has taken advantage of their inability to protect themselves.

Domestic violence is fueled by alcohol. The ability to restrain emotions and deal rationally with the dynamics of an intimate relationship is nullified by the excess consumption of alcohol. People who would not normally become aggressive or commit crimes against others have a completely different view on things after consuming alcohol. The trauma that is endured by the community due to excess alcohol consumption is immeasurable. The State of Alaska, through the Department

The State of Alaska, introgri the popularion of Public Safety has recently released media based on 'Everybody Hurts' when someone is injured or lost. This is true in many regards whether it is the loss of a loved one because of senseless actions of another; trauma experienced by victims of domestic violence and sexual crimes; the loss of a loved one who is incarcerated for their acof a loved one who is incarcerated for their actions; or the loss experienced by the children of our community in the trauma of witnessing vio lence against their loved ones; or the helplessness they feel at not being able to do anything about it. Drinking to excess and the behaviors that follow cut deeply in to the values of the community and influence every aspect of our lives.

Alcohol is not inherently bad. It is the acts that come from excess alcohol consumption and/or underage drinking that causes pain, suffering and injury. We ask you to know your limits and don't drink to excess; don't drink and drive; don't drink if you're underage; and think about how your actions are impacting others. One bad choice can last a

The Nome Police Department exists to help

We are there when you are in crisis and do our best to insure for your safety and help provide for a secure community for all citizens. But, we need the help of the community to meet the commuin the point of community to meet the community's safety needs.

In the event that you witness a crime or something that looks out-of-place, please immediately report any suspicious circumstances to the Nome Police at 443-5262. Any description of the suspi-

Pioneers get together at Cape Nome roadhouse picnic

By Amelia Cooper

"I took it, and I threw it, and I hit my daddy!" were the only comprehensible words that came out of her mouth as her father peeled the wet outer layer from her body. Jumping and shaking water from her sleeves, Alyssa, 4-almost-5 years old, was proud of her snowy victory.

Alyssa has not lived in Alaska for 30 years, but it is a benchmark that almost every other person in the house has met at some point.

found a tiny picture of what she wanted it to look like in a magazine. "I blew it up in my head, big," she said. "That's all I had."

"The kids helped haul sand from the beach," she said. She used the sand to mix mortar to hold the stones in place. "I just guessed at it," Bonnie said. She'd never made mortar either.

Bonnie's kids got out of bed to watch her light the first fire in 1966. "My heart was just going rickety-rick," she said. "It was wonderful."

Forty-six years later, Pioneers roasted marshmallows in the fire, and a pair of tiny red mittens sat drying on the mantle.

The party had wound down by 8 p.m. Alyssa was asleep under the study window, and only a few guests remained. The shadows from an American flag danced around the corner of the room as Bonnie told stories of beached whales and broken windows. Behind her were framed pictures of her camp from previous years. In yellow, pseudo-cursive boldface print they read:

"Welcome Pioneers of Alaska: Last Iditarod Check Point Safety Roadhouse."

TRUE PIONEERS — Members of Igloo #1, the Nome chapter of the Pioneers of Alaska held their annual picnic at Bonnie Hahn's Cape Nome Roadhouse.

Saturday June 2 marked this year's annual Pioneers of Alaska Igloo #1 picnic at Bonnie Hahn's Cape Nome roadhouse.

At least 30 years of Alaska residency, or 20 if you're a native Alaskan, is a requisite of joining the Pioneers of Alaska.

The Nome chapter, Igloo #1, was organized Feb 20, 1907. Three Igloos were formed that year, and in 1908 they convened to create the "Grand Igloo" umbrella. There are currently 17 active Pioneers of Alaska Igloos. Applications are available online.

In its history, the camp, as it's called by local Nomeites, has been employed as an orphanage, a CAA communications site, and was once the final rest stop on the Iditarod trail. It is also the home where Bonnie Hahn raised her children. Boiled down to its essence, the soup would be quite viscous.

The ground floor consists of four rooms, the rec room and the study on either end. This is where most of the event took place. A pool table in the rec room held the party's potluck spread of melon, burgers, beans, olives, three kinds of potato salad, and a variety of other homemade dishes. Underneath the pool table, a dusty collection of toy cars and Tonka trucks waited quietly for a playmate.

The walls were lined with rusted gold pans and shovelheads. Antlers, lead weights, hand-made snowshoes, and other sepia-toned Alaska paraphernalia were placed artfully around the room. Next to the door was an old green and cream AMi jukebox with a hand-written song list. #41 Radar Love, #51 Theme From Batman, #65 Love Me Do: "Those were the songs of our youth," Pat Hahn said.

It was an Alaskan house of story-book perfection.

The walls buzzed with chatter all afternoon as Pioneers talked about politics, work, the weather, their families, travels, music, recipes, and the midnight sun. One topic that came up several times was the fireplace that dominated the study and kept the cabin warm. "Bonnie built that thing there," one guest said.

The fireplace was about eight feet wide and looked like a natural formation. It was made of rocks and sand from the beach next to the cabin. "It took me three summers," Bonnie said. "Every time I went fishing, I'd bring home rocks." Nested between the stones were seagull and muskox figurines, and on the far side of the mantle was a stuffed white fox that sat watching the white caps roll over the Bering Sea.

Bonnie started building her fireplace in 1963, when her youngest child was only three years old. She'd never done masonry before, but she

SUMMER IS HERE —When summer school in Elim concluded on June 14 the students picniced on the beach. As the tide went out the kids found a shallow sandbar and raced out to it. Even though not all the ice was gone, the kids thought it was warm enough to play in the water.

Council gives short-lived property tax relief

By Sandra L. Medearis

The big news out of the Nome Common Council's June 13 meeting was the ordinance they did not adopt, that sets the tax bite on property owners

The Council debated and voted to amend the Nome General Fund Municipal Budget, but failed to vote the spending plan and the mill rate upon which it was based into reality.

The Council voted one by one on three additions: $10,000 for the N.E.S.T. shelter for the homeless, $100,000 for a paint job on St. Joe's meeting house, and $10,000 for Boys and Girls Club.

Then Councilwoman Mary Knodel made a successful motion to amend the amount coming out of City savings to make up the additions.

Right here, the Council lost the trail; there was no vote on the main motion that would have fixed a yay or nay to the spending plan for $10 million and change. Instead, Mayor Denise Michels directed Tom Moran, city clerk, to read the next ordinance on the agenda, concerning adoption of the construction capital projects funds budget.

The main ordinance also contained language to authorize the City to levy an 11-mill property tax. Even at 11 mills, the budget is over by about 2 mills to be made up from savings and a hoped-for increase in sales tax coming from a higher number of visitors coming to mine this summer.

A reporter told several Council members and city clerk after the meeting she did not think the Council had voted on the main budget motion; they felt they had. Monday, Moran acknowledged that the vote had not occurred and the Council had converted a scheduled work session for Wednesday to a special meeting where the Council would vote on adopting the general fund municipal budget.

However, property owners hoping for the Council to forget to tax them likely would have hopes dashed at a special meeting set for Wednesday noon, June 20, where the Council intended to finish their budget business.

The Council did vote on and pass the construction capital projects fund budget for $831,811; the special revenue fund budget for $333,732; the capital projects fund budget for $16.5 million; and the Port of Nome fund budget for $6.4 million.

State gives ground on mining at river mouths

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources has modified a rule concerning gold-seeking at the river mouths used for migration in and out by anadromous fish. State authorities are allowing suction dredgers to move closer to river mouths in the fall

The mining regulators had ruled that no suction dredging could occur within one-half mile of such streams. A rule had been a long time on the books about this and would be enforced finally with the anticipated arrival of more than the usual number of miners this season. Turbidity could divert fish going up river to spawn or going out for the life span sent in salt water. Kicking up sediment could affect capelin (cigar fish) and other small fish valuable to the salmon and sea mammal use of the food chain, according to biologists.

"Foul!" cried some miners who cared enough to come to meetings 4 lodge complaints concerning timing and the fact that the state had sold lease tracts that would be affected by

Nome man rescued after losing bearings in Bering Sea

John Bunche was pulled out of the Bering Sea Friday afternoon after miners on shore noticed that he had been in the 41°F water a long time and had not reached the offshore dredge where he was hired as a diver. Bunche apparently had missed his ride at shift change and was attempting to swim out to the dredge, which was ¼ mile offshore and six miles west of town. The miners on shore could hear him calling for help.

The dredge he was working on was associated with the Discovery Channel. The thick fog and strong current disoriented Bunche and pulled him to where he could not see the dredge or the shore.

The miners along the beach notified the Nome Police Department. Nome Fire Department's Search and Rescue team and the Nome Volunteer Ambulance service responded. The NVFD launched the rescue boat Guardian. The fog was so thick that two rescue personnel on the bow had a difficult time locating the Nome Fire Chief Matt Johnson said that Bunche had been in the water 2.5 hours. He was hypothermic and probably would not have lasted much longer.

Chief Johnson commented that notification is a concern for rescue personnel. "There is no way for us to know if they (dredgers) are in trouble." Many offshore miners are working by themselves and many are unskilled divers

Johnson said NVFD had just returned from a fire call four miles out on the Beam Road when the call came in for a diver in trouble on the West Beach. He fears that this will be one of many calls for help this dredging season.

DEC demands tank farm records from City, NJUS

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation wants all the records the City of Nome and Nome Joint Utility System have on the historic West Nome Tank Farm on Port Road. The City and NJUS have 30 days from receipt of the subpoena issued by the DEC on June 6 by faxing or mailing all documents and records to the state office of attorney general in Anchorage. Failure to respond without acceptable reason could bring charges of contempt. The administrative subpoena was issued by Commissioner Larry Hartig of DEC, backed up by the state attorney general's office. City officials are complying with the request.

A couple of weeks ago you mentioned in the paper that Crowley was going to supply Bonanza with Gas until the next barge came in, so that Bonanza could still sell gas at their pumps. But after watching a couple of weeks of this, how come Bonanza's gas is still more than 4 cents cheaper a gallon than Crowley's? How can this be? Isn't Crowley trying to make a profit? It's Crowley's gas, yet it's cheaper to buy it at Bo-What am I missing in this? In Diesel prices, the trend re-

I've been trying to follow and figure out all the different ins and outs for fuel, anywhere in Alaska. There doesn't seem to be any rhyme, or reason, that can be applied to what the prices are in any one place, especially when comparing prices to places even one village away.

When I look at the fuel prices for our region's villages and Nome, they vary almost three dollars from high-

Blind and Deaf

The State of Alaska seems to have gone blind and deaf when it comes to this region. There is a Coastal Zone Management Initiative hearing set in July for 10 communities in Alaska. This is an important issue for Nome. We used to have a Coastal Zone Management Plan until the governor nixed it. We have a port, we have fishing, we have offshore mining and we do subsistence. Are we one of the communities set for the hearings? No. There is no meeting planned for Nome. Testimony will be taken in Kenai, Soldotna, Anchorage, Barrow, Kotzebue, Bethel, Ketchikan, Juneau, Fairbanks and Wasilla. The Lt. Governor's office says they are only required by law to hold hearings in eight communities and they are doing ten. Well, bless their hearts. Why not do 11 and include Nome? One wonders if Fairbanks and Wasilla are planning to expand their ports. Maybe they are planning to move to the coast.

It's important to keep the public informed. It's important to get feedback about government initiatives. It's important to provide a forum for information exchange. It's important to listen to the public before enacting legislation that will impact a specific group of citizens. It is also important to notify the public when a hearing is held. The state isn't the only entity that goes blind and deaf when Nome is an issue. When's the last time Sen. Begich came to town? Can't remember? Our own City isn't without fault when it comes to openness. What about advertizing all the jobs the City puts out to bid? Why are so many City Council meetings cancelled and then set for Wednesday noon? Why are our ordinances only given one week's public notice? All local governments need to bend over backward to keep the community involved.

The public has a right to know what's happening in their town, state and nation. Politicians need to mingle with and listen to the grass roots. The public has a right to know what's happening in their town, state and nation. If the politicians aren't doing their best to provide open government, them citizens need to get up from their Lazy Boy recliners, make some noise and hold the politicians' feet to the fire. Good government may start at the ballot box, but the power remains in the hands of the individuals who care about their community. - N.L.M. - est to lowest in any category, and it even varies whether fuel oil or gasoline is more expensive. If prices on the Kenai Peninsula varied this much and this arbitrarily, the news reports, at least, would all be up in arms, yet when I mention it to anyone in Nome they just shrug their shoulders and lift their hands, like there is no accounting for village, or Nome, politics. The statements given to the state agencies are for overall prices averaging all our village prices together, and are very high. But when we compare prices village to village within our region, or even just within any one village the prices between the gas and fuel oil vary and you can't predict which product in a village will be more than the others.

OPINION

From what I understand, when the fuel is brought into the region by NSEDC, everything is the same price for gas and another single price for fuel oil. Fortunately, for us NSEDC is getting the best bulk prices possible by combining purchases for all the villages together and giving the whole project interest-free loans for the year to pay it all their fuel, up front. The differences between barging fuel to Gambell and Savoonga should be pretty similar. Or Elim, Koyuk, and even Unalakleet, should all close. Here is a chart comparing the prices of fuel as they were recorded, last fall.

The "average" at the bottom of the chart is done by simply adding all the 15 prices together and dividing by 15 for each fuel. No account is made that some of the villages have 1,500 people in them and others 150, and the resulting differences in the quantity of the fuels used in these different places. What I found most interesting in this chart was the variation in prices between the villages. For comparison Nome's prices at that time, were: Gas $5.43, Diesel $5.93, and Fuel Oil $5.83.

I wonder if food prices, or even wages, vary this greatly from village to village? I never liked economics in school, but I can see where it makes a difference even in our region. Fortunately, our winter fuel madness is almost over. We can go calmly about our summer business at least for a couple of months before the panic starts in again, and the hunger for heat starts burning inside us, or at least in our houses. Where would you go to get a better handle on all this?

Dear Editor,

I wanted to comment on your June 7 article "For First Time Ever, Diomede Slated to receive regular Passenger Service." First off, I don't think the state's contribution of $200,000 although matched by D.O.T.'s Essential Air Service Program is not nearly enough to address Diomede's transportation problems.

It is still not a regular passenger service if a passenger has to be dumped off due to mail. Then the round trip fare of $800 is ridiculously too much! Who are the entities subsidizing, the helicopter service or the people of Little Diomede?

How many miles is it from Wales to Little Diomede? Wouldn't it be cheaper to fly to Wales on a plane then take the helicopter to Diomede?

Why can't the state contract with a helicopter service to be based in Wales so the helicopter can make more trips to Diomede, short trips which can save everyone money, especially the residents?

With the volume of more short trips between Wales and Diomede, couldn't the service see it lucrative enough to reduce their eyebrow raising $200 one-way airfare for such a short distance?

I think the growing population of Diomede should have a couple of their own helicopters by now. Couldn't the state, combined with D.O.T.'s Essential Air Service Program, Federal funding, and grants make that happen? Then Diomede can contract with the Postal Service to deliver their own mail from Wales.

I have friends and relative that live in Little Diomede and one day I would like to visit them, but the $800 airfare is just too much! It's very serious problem, one that Diomede has for a very long time and if any place in the State needs funding, Diomede has to take priority. Write to the politicians, straighten them out, and let them see the light.

Thanks, Leo Apangalook, Jr. Gambell, AK 99742

for Old St. Joe's did not fly the first time around, with only Knodel and Councilman Jerald Brown giving it the nod. Councilman Stan Andersen wanted to know more about the two bids submitted for the job: what preparation on the building would be, the type of paint, "what things they are going to do," and whether there had been any specifications listed in the bid documents.

"Instead of just shot-gunning the thing, why can't we get some honest figures?" Andersen said.

Three other councilmembers agreed with Andersen and also voted no: Josie Stiles, Louis Green and Randy Pomeranz.

Brown brought the $100,000 back for another vote, citing the need to start painting in the summer season. The Council approved the expenditure, but a winning bid was not presented at the meeting for approval.

In other dollars and cents business, the Council:

- Set the City's contribution to Nome Public Schools at $1.8 million. The contribution comprises a state mandated investment of $866,390 plus an additional contribution of $906729
- Introduced into first reading an ordinance approving the Nome Joint Utility System 2012 budget for revenues of 13.4 million, operation and maintenance expenses of $13.5 million, Figuring in the depreciation amount of $4.9 yields a net margin of about $500,000 to be put toward capital improvements, debt service, fuel inventory and grant program local matches.
- Passed a resolution approving a contract with the City's state lobbyist, Wendy Chamberlain, for spending year 2013 in the amount of $75,000.
- Authorized City Manager Jose Bahnke to enter a deal between state

Dept. of Public Safety and City of Nome to provide dispatch services for Alaska State Troopers. The agreement pays the City $20,000 for the year.

• Approved hiring Eileen Bechtol of Bechtol Planning and Development to continue to provide planning services for another year beginning July 1. The contract is worth $60 an hour with a contract cap of $20,000 plus $175 a day for expenses when Bechtol is in Nome. She lives in Homer.

• Introduced into first reading an ordinance authorizing an agreement with Seakers, Inc., whose business includes tank farm maintenance work, to lease land at Port of Nome for five years at $288 per week. Rent, which does not include utilities, would rise to $312 per month for a second five years.

Additionally, the Council made final an ordinance amending the Port of Nome tariff rules to separate shallow and deep draft vessels. Dredges that draw less than 20 inches of water must tie up in the Snake River, while operators of vessels with deeper draft can moor them in the harbor. However, for large vessels with a shallow draft, harbor staff would work out individual arrangements, Joy Baker, harbormaster, said. Details could be worked out when dredge and other water craft operators register for a port permit as required at the harbormaster's office, she said. the Port of Nome Commission approved the rule to alleviate expected crowding at docks in the inner harbor

In other business the Council approved a memorandum of agreement with Norton Sound Health Corp. for use of the Nome Rec Center as a shelter during times of emergency.

The documents pertain to site investigation and cleanup where petroleum hydrocarbon contamination has been found in the soil or in groundwater at or near the site, stemming from fuel spills and refueling activities. Fuel impacts extend to the Snake River—an anadromous river used by migrating fish and in Snake River sediment, according to DEC documents. The collection of documents and other records will assist in trying to resolve a cleanup and closure plan.

The USAF Relative Risk Evaluation worksheets ranked the former pipeline and tank farm sites as "medium" and "low" overall risks. Surface water quality violations have not been observed, according to DEC documents.

The City and NJUS intend to comply and are in the process. NJUS staff has put in about 20 hours searching NJUS board minutes from over the years, and records that are not scanned or made electronic, according to John K. Handeland, utility manager. "It will take considerably longer to examine all of hem manually," he said.

The U.S. Air Force built the 6.58-acre petroleum storage facility to support the World War II Lend-Lease Program along what is now Port Road north of the new power plant. The USAF operated the tank farm along with other fuel businesses—Standard Oil of California, a predecessor to Chevron, and Crowley—until about 20 years ago.

The USAF demolished the site in 1992, where facilities included different sizes of storage tanks, a fuel pump station, and piping. The USAF still owns the site. The DEC is investigating the release of petroleum products during the use of the site. The pump station and some piping used to carry petroleum products within the tank farm and along Port Road still exist and need cleanup by responsible parties.

Investigation has revealed an area of contamination on the other side of Port Road where fuel lines led to the old City powerhouse. Tank farm operators—fuel companies and the USAF—have provided records of their use of the lines, but contend that they have no record of owning, leasing or operating fuel lines going from the tank farm to the powerhouse. They maintain that the responsibility for the contamination northeast of the WNTF site lies with the City, according to background provided in the subpoena Cleanup has been ongoing for 15 to 20 years.

"While we're searching for information to comply with the subpoena, so far we've found a single map with a notation of a pipe from the tank farm," Handeland said. "No documents to this point provide information on ownership, who built it, or how the pipeline was decommissioned.

"We know there was a pipe, as when we have done water and sewer work we have unearthed pieces, but no indication of any petroleum product in the line," he said.

According to Handeland, the City's attorney has been made aware of the subpoena. His only advice: comply with the subpoena.

The subpoena calls for all documents in the City's custody or control, and spells out that this means just about any recording or transmittal of information—written, faxed, recorded, minutes of meetings, memoranda, permits, indexes, file wrappers, studies, checks, worksheets, office communications, videotapes, drawings, plans, surveys—name it.

Chevron and Crowley have hired various environmental contractors to provide some remediation and reconnaissance in 2004-2005 and 2008, respectively.

"It's my understanding the Air Force has attempted various remediation methods at the site, Handeland

On June 15, Kerwin Krause, DNR mineral property manager, affirmed the one-half mile rule, but gave up some slack on the issue during the last 10 weeks of the suction dredge mining season.

Krause announced the exceptions to the mining prohibitions thus: "Mining offshore of the mouths of the Snake River, Penny River and Cripple River between the dates of Sept. 15 to Dec. 1 is allowed to a distance of 500 feet from the mouths of these rivers. At no time, between Sept. 15 and Dec. 1, may any mining operation be closer than 500 feet to these three river mouths.

Figuring half of 5,280, the number of feet making a mile, makes 2,640 feet. Subtracting 500 feet from that gives 2,140, the distance from the river mouths that state Dept. of Fish and Game and DNR are giving up out of the ½ mile limit. Most mining activities close around the first part of November.

SHARING THE SEA— Fish net and dredge on East Beach.

"In the late season with some good weather, there are some good dredging days, so it's worth something," was local miner Cliff McHenry's take on the easing of the stipulation late in the season.

Krause made it clear once more that a one-mile radius of any anadromous river mouth was off limits from June 1 to July 15 for 10-inch or larger suction dredges or mechanical placer mining operations such as an excavator on a barge.

Again, Krause reminded that dredge operators must stay 300 feet away from fishing harvest set nets. Eight-inch or larger suction dredges or mechanical placer operations that create turbidity in the water must keep a distance of 500 feet.

Subsistence salmon fishing begins in Nome subdistrict

By the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game

The subsistence salmon gillnet fishing schedule in the Nome subdistrict began June 15. A subsistence permit is required to harvest salmon when subsistence fishing in Nome subdistricts waters. The permit may be picked up at the Nome office of the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. Please bring State of Alaska identification or another identification that indicates Alaska residency. Permits are free.

The weekly gillnet fishing schedule for all marine waters of the Nome subdistrict is from 6 p.m. Wednesday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Gillnets up to 300 feet in length are allowed in marine waters.

The weekly gillnet fishing schedule for fresh waters of the Nome subdistrict is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. The fresh water areas open to gillnet fishing are listed on the permit. Gillnets up to 50 feet in length are allowed.

No more than one-half of any channel may be blocked by gillnets.

Subsistence hook and line fishing is open at all times. Sport fish bag limits apply when subsistence fishing with hook and line outside of Nome subdistrict subsistence areas. All chum salmon must be immediately released in the water when fishing in the Nome subdistrict outside of the subsistence areas listed on the back of the permit. No snagging is allowed anywhere in fresh waters.

The chum salmon run is expected to meet escapement goals, and the department will allow seining in Nome subdistrict subsistence areas during the gillnet fishing schedule in June except for the Penny and Cripple rivers, which are closed to chum salmon fishing. In July the department may allow seining depending on salmon counts at the escapement projects.

Areas from Topkok Head to Rocky Point and from Cape Douglas to Cape Rodney are open seven days a week. From Cape Douglas to Cape Rodney and from Topkok Head to Rocky Point, there are no catch limits in marine waters for subsistence fishermen.

Check the back of the Nome subdistrict subsistence permit for the catch limits for the marine and fresh water subsistence areas between Cape Rodney and Topkok Head.

For more information, contact Jim Menard, ADF and G area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, phone (907) 443-5167.

Commercial king crab catch limit jumps to 465,450 lbs

By Laurie McNicholas

The summer 2012 guideline harvest level for the Norton Sound commercial red king crab fishery totals 465,450 pounds, Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game announced on Monday. He said 34,910 pounds of the harvest will be allocated to the Community Development Quota fishery and 430,540 pounds to the open access fishery.

"If the fishermen harvest the 465,450 [pounds], it will be the largest harvest since 1986," Menard noted. The 2011 Norton Sound summer commercial red king crab catch totaled roughly 401,000 pounds.

The North Pacific Fishery Management Council approved recommendations from the council's Crab

Planning Team and Science and Statistical Committee to set the fishery's 2012 acceptable biological catch at 480,000 pounds and the overfishing limit at 520,000 pounds at a meeting June 10 in Kodiak.

In March 2012 the Alaska Board of Fisheries adopted a revised GHL for the Norton Sound summer commercial red king crab fishery that allows the department to set the harvest quota at up to 15 percent of the legal male biomass when it is estimated at more than 3 million pounds.

"The legal male red king crab biomass is 3.21 million pounds," Menard noted. "That puts us in the 13 to 15 percent range for setting the guideline harvest level." He said he set the GHL at 14.5 percent (465,450 pounds) to stay within the acceptable biological catch.

"If [the GHL] was set at 15 percent (481,500 pounds), we would exceed the ABC," Menard explained. "The consequence of exceeding the ABC would be to have the amount of pounds that exceeded the ABC to be taken off of next year's ABC."

University of Alaska to survey Bering and Chukchi fish

By Amelia Cooper

UAF Assistant Professor of Fisheries in Juneau, Franz Mueter is in Nome this summer, preparing to conduct fall surveys of Western Alaska fish populations.

Photo by Amelia Cooper FISH EXPERT — Fisheries biologist Franz Mueter from the UAF in Juneau was in Nome in early June organize the surveys.

There will be two ships performing two different surveys, according to Mueter. The first the Bering Explorer, will be employed for a "surface troll survey." Surveyors will analyze 60-foot water columns along the surface of the Bering and Chukchi seas, using SONAR to detect fish such as salmon, arctic cod, herring, capelin, and pollock. This is a 60-day survey that should start around August 1 and run through the end of September.

The Bering Explorer surface survey will start and end in Dutch Harbor, and stop in Nome twice (after 20 and 40 days) to swap the crew.

The other ship, which has not yet been chosen, is for a "bottom troll survey." This survey will begin at the end of August, and will last for 50 days. It will only be done in the Chukchi Sea. There was a bottom troll survey done in the Bering Sea in 2010. "It was controversial," Mueter smiled.

According to Mueter, there are two main goals tied to results from the surveys. The first is to simply inventory the fish species—"get a basic idea of their distribution and abundance."

The second goal is to observe the impacts of climate change on the fish.

"A lot of my work in the past has focused on how distribution and abundance changes in low and high temperatures," Mueter said.

Fish go in different areas in warm and cold years. "Sub-arctic and temperate species go north when it's warmer," Mueter said. The survey may help uncover the northern extent of these species. In cold years with lots of ice, "cold pools" are created. "Cold pools" are sunken pools of water that are too cold for the fish to survive in, Mueter said.

The Coastal Impact Assistance Program and the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management provide primary funding for these surveys, according to Mueter. BOEM is a federal entity that manages oil and gas—they are interested in how oil development affects the fish. The BOEM website boasts environmental protection and renewable energy development as critical parts of their mission.

CIAP is a state program, established in 2005. It authorizes funds to Alabama, Alaska, California, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas "for the conservation, protection and preservation of coastal areas, including wetlands," according to the BOEM Regulation and Enforcement website.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration is another contributor. the variation of the that exist.

Mueter

There have been a handful of surveys done on the Bering and Chukchi seas since the 1950s, but equipment has changed dramatically since then. Nothing this comprehensive has been done before, Mueter said. Results will be compared to those of the few previous surveys that exist.

Mueter has worked on the Chukchi Sea once before. "It was actually one of my first surveys as a grad student when I arrived in Fairbanks in 1990." Mueter said.

Mueter got his PhD from UAF, where he studied oceanography and statistics, in 1999. He started his work on ground fish in the Gulf of Alaska, studying halibut, cod, crab, and arctic cisco. He has been the Assistant Professor of Fisheries in Juneau since 2008.

Results should turn over within a year. "We're hoping to come back next spring sometime to share some results with the community," Mueter said

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are preserved forever as his legacy in the "McDaniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

This diary was painstakingly transcribed and proofed by museum staff from the original 3"x5" journal book kept in Wilfred's pocket throughout the summer of 1900. The spelling errors are all his!

In 1898, the Three Lucky Swedes discovered gold at Anvil Creek. Over the next winter, miners left the Canadian Klondike and streamed into this area mushing dog teams, walking and even riding bikes down the frozen Yukon River to the Bering Sea. By the summer of 1899 all the creeks had been staked. In late July 1899, when we were called Anvil City, there were hundreds of frustrated miners with no ground to dig. As luck would have it, as the story goes, one of the soldiers who was here to help keep the peace, ran his hand through the beach sands and found GOLD! There was gold on the beach!

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget Newspaper, after 24 days at sea, the steamship Zealandia arrived at the Nome roadstead. Wilfred and his brother Ed begin to live their dream mining on Nome's golden beaches. Let's see how serious their case of gold fever will become!

We have had very fine weather for the past three days. Quite warm this forenoon. Worked at the rocker today. Got over half an ounce. Carried our pay dirt in buckets for a distance of 100 yards. Today is the longest day of the year. The sun shone nearly all night. It just went behind the hills for an hour or two, then rose a little east of where it set. Took two photographs at midnight. Midnight was no darker than a cloudy day in the states.

This morning was quite warm. Spent the forenoon working on our rocker. Made a few changes in it. Paid 73¢ for three 6 in. boards 5 ft. long. The weather is changing and we may get a rain. More vessels arrive everyday. From three to four everyday. Did not rock this afternoon did not feel like working as we were up too late last night. A large tent was placed on our pay streak today. We are getting very crowded here. If one should find pay it would have 40 tents on it. We have about two days work outside of the tent, hope to get $20 out of it.

Musk ox defense: Keep the Super Soaker handy

By Amelia Cooper

Water guns may be the new musthave self-defense accessory this season with the increasing number of musk oxen roaming the lowlands.

"They've only been coming down this far for the last couple of years," Alaska Department of Fish and Game Wildlife Biologist Letty Hughes said. Musk oxen mosey from the hilltops to the tundra in the springtime to feed on lower vegetation. People who live in areas thick with alder and willow plants are in a great position for viewing musk oxen, and a potentially hazardous position for carrying out daily tasks.

Musk oxen are territorial creatures. "Their whole defensive idea is based on standing their ground," Claudia Ihl said. Ihl is the Assistant Professor of Biology at the University of Alaska Northwest Campus. Musk oxen don't run from loud noises like caribou or moose do. In fact, shouting and crowding a musk ox may only agitate it, she said.

Hughes said it depends on the musk ox. "Some will move, some won't." Air horns and vehicles are unreliable as deterrents.

In groups, musk oxen ball up in a defensive position when their territory is encroached on, Hughes said. When a single musk ox is agitated, it sways. Occasionally it will snort. "Sometimes they'll paw at the ground," she said, "swinging that head."

Musk oxen could charge, whether they are alone or in a herd. They are built like muscle cars. They are bulky but they can run. "They don't run very fast or for very long," Hughes said, but they pick up speed at an alarming rate. A musk ox's top speed is about 37 mph.

Musk oxen don't have many natural predators. Humans, grizzly bears and wolves, close relatives of our domestic canine pals, are the musk oxen's only real threats. This may explain their unrestrained hatred for

When confronted by a musk ox, figuring out what to do can be tricky. "First I'd take my dog inside," Ihl said. Musk oxen have been known to do gruesome things to dogs. "Sometimes a dog can just be sitting there," Hughes said. "The musk ox just has a chip on its shoulder and decides to go after it."

Fences are the first line of defense for pets. "If you have the ability, put them in a chain link or some sort of fenced area," Hughes suggested. Fences wont keep musk oxen out, she warned, but it will slow them

"They don't really care too much for water," Hughes said. While musk oxen enjoy wading in pools, sprinklers and hoses will turn them away. Spraying water is how musk oxen are removed from the airport runway, Hughes said.

Cutting back the delicious habitat vegetation in residential areas is another method of containment.

Ihl thinks that hunting musk oxen will provide a long-term solution to the incidents. Musk oxen around Nome are indifferent to humans. "When you hunt them, they become shy and more wary of people," she Musk oxen are hardy. "Not a whole lot phases them," Hughes said. Conditioning them to think that certain areas are unpleasant by spraying them with water is her approach.

Bulls have a tendency to be more aggressive during the rut in July and August, Hughes said, and safety is the bottom line.

"You always want to have something between you and the animal," she said. Be aware of the Defense of Life and Property law, and call

ADF&G or the Alaska State Troopers if a musk ox is causing a prob-

VISITING BIRDERS—Bird watchers take advantage of the boardwalk to Swanberg Dredge just outside Nome on June 15.

Migrators of the earth and sky meet lens-to-eye in Nome

By Amelia Cooper

All summer long, Nome is booming with unfamiliar footsteps. From mid-May to mid-June, it is the Aves aficionados leading the tourism pa-

This year, approximately 100 bird watchers have checked in at the Nome visitor's center. The Aurora Inn has been booked all month. "They come in groups," Aurora Inn desk attendant Jessica Russell said. "Some stay a week, some stay longer.'

Armed with bug spray, binoculars and identification books, bird watchers take to the field to test their endurance

Some birders will watch and wait for as long as 16 hours at a time. In a single day, a birder can usually see about 40 to 60 species, but there are more than 150 bird species in the Nome area. According to the Alaska Department of Fish and Game website, there are around 200.

The Kougarok, Teller, and Council roads, which converge in Nome, are all prime bird-watching territory. They are closed for most of the year, when there is snow on the ground. Since spring breakup and migration coincide, closed roads are not a problem for seasonal birders.

Bird watchers generally mark their sightings in communal books, such as the binders in the Nome Visitor's Center and in the lobby of the Aurora Inn.

These binders are filled with blank spreadsheets with spaces to write the date, the species of bird, and the location it was spotted. They are used as a reference for where to go next. Records are to be checked daily, in the event that a rare bird (such as the Eurasian bullfinch, the bristle-thighed curlew or the bluetroat) is documented.

While some bird watchers prefer to enjoy the wildlife on their own, many participate in tours through Alaskan Northwest Adventures and Nome Discovery.

As the birds finish migrating through Nome in mid-to-late June, so do the birders. Locals can continue to watch birds that brave the fall and winter months. July marks the end of the birding season as the summer is handed off to mining and eco-

Diabetes: The silent killer

ALASKA

FAMILY

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Look around you and randomly pick two other adults. Statistically speaking, one of the three of you has either diabetes or pre-diabetes.

According to the most recent fact sheet from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), 11.3 percent of U.S.

adults have type 2 diabetes and 35 percent of all U.S. adults over age 20 have prediabetes. The percentage increases with age so that 26.9 percent of people in the U.S. over age 65 have type 2 diabetes and 50 percent of people over age 65 have pre-diabetes.

These statistics are frightening because diabetes is preventable, yet it remains a major cause of death from heart attacks, strokes, and kidney disease in the United States. Diabetes is also the number one cause of blindness, non-traumatic amputations, and kidney failure. Furthermore, people with diabetes are more prone to cancer, especially colon cancer.

Some people develop a dangerous sense of complacency when their blood sugar is only slightly elevated. I have heard many people say, "The doctor said I just had pre-diabetes," or, "I just have borderline diabetes." But pre-diabetes or borderline diabetes is actually Type 2 diabetes in ate some supper. Got word that the Vine arrived. Our boat was cut loose and got damaged in the surf. Had to go back to town and fix her up. Worked on our boat until midnight. We put in 16 hours today. We are going to rest tomorrow.

June 28, 1900

Got up at 9 o' clock this morning. I feel first rate, only I am rather tired. There was a killing down town Wednesday. Quarrel over a mining deal. One man killed the other and the shooter has a bullet in him. Is not dead but will die I guess. A fellow had his head smashed with a beer bottle last night as we came through town.

June 29, 1900

We pulled up camp here and are going up the beach. Had to make two trips. We rowed and towed our boat 7 or 8 miles above Nome. We left our baggage and hoisted our sail and went back after the rest of our stuff. We had to stay all night and will go back in the morning.

its earliest and most treatable form.

Type 2 diabetes, also called noninsulin dependent diabetes mellitus, is a silent killer. It often festers for years unnoticed, gradually doing damage to the entire body long before symptoms develop.

In fact, on the day a person is diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, it is estimated that he or she has already lost half of the insulin-producing cells in his or her pancreas. Even DOCTOR worse, the risk of heart attacks and strokes doubles when a person develops diabetes. Studies show that a person diagnosed with diabetes has the same risk of having a heart attack as a nondiabetic person who has already had a heart attack.

The good news is that diabetes or pre-diabetes can now be detected in the earliest stages by using one of several simple tests:

Fasting glucose check. Checking a fasting blood sugar (glucose) at least eight hours after a meal is the easiest and least expensive test. A healthy fasting glucose is 65-99 mg/dL. Pre-diabetes is defined by a glucose of 100-124 mg/dL and type 2 diabetes is defined by a glucose of 125 mg/dL or higher.

Hemoglobin A1c (A1c)test: Checking the A1c level allows the doctor to estimate the average blood sugar over a three month period. A normal A1c falls between 4 percent and 5.7 percent. Pre-diabetes is defined as an A1c of 5.7-6.4 percent, and Type 2 diabetes is defined by an A1c of 6.5 percent or higher.

Glucose Tolerance Test: Some doctors also order a glucose tolerance test which looks for an unusual rise in glucose above 200 mg/dL two hours after ingesting a specially prepared sugary drink.

Once diagnosed, the progression of type 2 diabetes and pre-diabetes can be stopped, even reversed, by taking a few basic steps.

The national diabetes prevention program, the results of which were originally published in the New England Journal of Medicine in 2002, has shown that overweight people with pre-diabetes who lose 7 percent of their body weight and who exercise for 30 minutes each day cut their risk of developing diabetes in half.

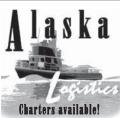

Even people who are diagnosed with diabetes find that exercise and maintaining a healthy body weight allows them to reduce the amount of medication needed for controlling their blood sugar.

Diet can also have a profound impact on whether or not a person develops diabetes. A diabetes prevention diet is high in fiber, rich in vegetables, beans, and healthy seafood like salmon, and low in saturated fats. In reality, the diabetes prevention diet is the diet we should all be eating.

Talk to your doctor about diabetes screening options and prevention strategies during your next exam. Most people find that knowing their diabetes status, even when the numbers are normal, provides motivation to maintain a healthy diabetes prevention lifestyle.

EAST BEACH DREDGERS - Calm waters on a recent morning brought out the local flock of gold dredges. This week gold was valued at $1618.65 per ounce.

Kotzebue gunman killed in standoff

At 9:15 Sunday morning the Kotzebue Police Department received word that a vehicle had struck a guard rail along Ted Stevens Way near the airport. The initial report indicated that the driver had brandished a weapon at a civilian who had driven past the accident scene.

The Kotzebue Troopers responded as back up for the Kotzebue police officer and were immediately shot at from the vehicle by the suspect. The officer returned fire. Two Troopers were struck during the exchange of weapons fire. It was unknown if the suspect was stuck.

One Trooper was medevaced to Anchorage where he is in stable condition .The other Trooper was treated and released from the Kotzebue clinic. The suspect remained barricaded in his vehicle. The troopers called in the Southcenteral Special Emergency Reaction Team (SERT). The Kotzebue Airport remained closed to non-emergency traffic because the location of the incident was near the end of the active runway.

The standoff ended at 6 p.m. when Troopers were able to approach the vehicle. They found the suspect, Arvid Nelson, Jr., 50, deceased inside the vehicle from an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound.

The AST's Alaska Bureau of Investigation is conducting the ongoing investigation and the names of the Troopers involved in the initial shooting would be released after 72

Saying It Sincerely

Watch what you say By Pastor Mike Christian, Jr., River of Life Assembly of God A Member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Set a guard over my mouth, O Lord; keep watch over the door of my lips." (Psalm 141:3)

"May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be pleasing in your sight, O Lord, my Rock and my Redeemer." (Psalm 19:14)

You have power in your tongue! The words you and I speak each day have the ability to build up or tear down. This is why we must watch what we say at all

Jesus said, "But I tell you that men will have to give account on the day of judgment for every careless word they have spoken. For by your words you will be acquitted, and by your words you will be condemned." (Matthew 12:36-37)

Our words will be our witness on Judgment Day. I used to think of this verse negatively. I used to say to myself, "You better watch what you say; your words will condemn you." But then I realized my idle words would justify me as well as condemn me. I began to recall the dozens of offhand comments I made during the day that really show I love God and care about his work.

Today - Watch what you say! Speak positive, uplifting words. Say things that edify and lift up those who are listening to you. Your words can be a source of encouragement for many who are carrying a heavy burden in their heart or life. Take time to tell someone how much you appreciate them for what they do each day. Take a moment to thank the police officer for performing his/her duties each and every day in the community. Thank the clerk at the grocery store for smiling at you while you stand in the checkout line. Thank the teachers for committing themselves to help your/our children gain the education they need in order to lead productive lives in the community. Thank the business owners in the community for their commitment to the community and for the products they provide. The list goes on and on.

Begin to say "good things" to everyone you come into contact with each day. Soon, you'll begin to see smiles on the faces of those you meet, whether it is on the street, in the post office, at the grocery store, at the hospital or even in the church. It is our privilege, and responsibility (especially as Christians), to lift one another up in the Lord. How much brighter the day is when our words are uplifting and encouraging to those around us.

The word of God says; "Let your conversation be always full of grace, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how to answer everyone." (Colossians 4:6) May the Lord bless you abundantly with a heart that is filled with love, and a tongue that spreads that love with words that encourage and uplift the hearts and souls of those to whom you speak.

Have a wonderful day!

Irving B. Welchons III Charlotte, NC 28270

Dear Editor,

KICY, KNOM and other public radio stations throughout western Alaska are of our little world of place where we were born, raised, learn from our elders, teachers, and preachers and from one another.

Listening to man made machines like the radio makes us ask "Who Created Man?" We let machines work for us. Having lost all sensitivity, they have given themselves over to sensuality so as to indulge in every kind of impurity, with a continual lust for more.

Our thousands of acres of mountains, glaciers, beaches and waterways make up this extra ordinary resource on the Bering Sea and tundra. Most of our ways of living inside our villages are accessible via water taxi, air charter or boat rentals. barges and most teachers are imports from outside villages.

Our Native villagers were taught our former ways of life yet new ways are determined by outsiders with large machinery. The whole village cannot afford the equipment that changes the environment. There is no regard for the people who live there. Visitors fill their pockets with money and leave polluted grounds, scenery and the subsistence lifestyle of village life changes.

Continual efforts from outside Alaska want to change the clean air, clean waters, lakes, water ways, to pollute the native ways of life who wıll lısten.

How many will talk to our Alaska representatives and vote with better judgment? Respectfully, Gabriel Myomick Anchorage, AK 99501

Public Television

Effective July 1, public television throughout the Interior will be provided under the banner of KUAC TV while viewers in Bethel and Southeast Alaska will receive service from KAKM in Anchorage. As a result of the transition, the AlaskaOne signal will stop transmitting.

While the name is changing from AlaskaOne to KUAC TV in the Interior, viewers will notice no change other than the new name and logo. KUAC TV in Fairbanks will continue to broadcast the same programming with the same program schedule. AlaskaOne viewers in Southeast Alaska and the Bethel region will transition to a new public television service originating from KAKM in Anchorage.

The change comes after years of work throughout the state. In November 2011, the state's four public television stations convened the Alaska Public Broadcasting Service board meeting to discuss centralizing a statewide feed from Anchorage. The possibility of a combined, statewide service had been thoroughly investigated during the previous three years. When the Alaska Public Broadcasting Service board voted to move the distribution point from Fairbanks to Anchorage, KUAC determined that the move would ultimately be detrimental to Interior communities' service. The solution was to opt out of the statewide service and continue as a standalone station, which allows KUAC to tailor programming to the needs of the Interior.

KUAC will continue to provide all four digital channels, KUAC TV, WORLD, Create and UATV. KUAC has provided public broadcasting to Alaskans for a half century: KUAC TV marked 40 years of service in Alaska in December 2011 and KUAC FM will celebrate 50 years of service in October 2012. More information about the transition can be

Scrapping of Polar Sea halted

Senators Lisa Murkowski, Mark Begich and Maria Cantwell (D-WA) have reached an agreement with the U.S. Coast Guard to postpone the scrapping of the Polar Sea through the end of 2012 - scheduled to begin within days, on Monday. The agreement was reached during a meeting of the Senators and the Commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard, Admiral Robert Papp, Jr.

The icebreaker, based in Seattle, had been scheduled to be dry-docked and taken apart beginning Monday. This process would have ripped out the vessel's hubs and sealed off major portions of the vessel - a key step toward final destruction of the icebreaker.

"As an Arctic Nation, we need to proceed intelligently as opportunities open up in our northern waters," said Senator Murkowski. "Dismantling critical components of the Polar Sea without a complete plan for its replacement – a year before Polar Star will be back in the water - would not be the best course of action. While this may only be a six month respite for the Polar Sea, I will use this period to work through my role on the Appropriations Committee to make America's icebreaking capacity a top priority.

"The Coast Guard has listened to our call to postpone the dry docking of the Polar Sea so we can continue to explore the most cost-effective measures to ensure the United States has adequate icebreaking capabilities," said Senator Begich. "Rebuilding this valuable cutter would save taxpayer dollars, create jobs, and increase our ability to operate in the Arctic, and I look forward to continuing to discuss next steps in revitalizing the Polar Sea."

"We are glad the Coast Guard has agreed to postpone the scrapping of this valuable icebreaker," Cantwell. "This is good news for Washington shipbuilding jobs and for America's icebreaking capability. The Polar Sea's hull is still in sound condition. Postponing its scrapping allows the Administration and Congress more time to consider all options for fulfilling the nation's critical icebreaking missions."

Scrapping Polar Sea would leave the United States with only one operational icebreaker, the Healy, which was designed primarily as a scientific research vessel and only has medium icebreaking capability. The second heavy duty icebreaker, Polar Star, is currently in Seattle being refitted after years of receiving routine maintenance in 'caretaker status.

Governor Signs Alaska Native Language Bill

Last week, Governor Sean Parnell attended the Rural Providers Conference in Dillingham, where he signed Senate Bill 130, which will establish an Alaska Native Language Preservation and Advisory Council. The council will assess the state of Alaska Native languages, re-evaluate the programs, and make recommendations to establish new programs or reorganize existing programs, as well as identify resources to seek cost effective projects in communities where restoration is most needed.

"Without language preservation, a culture dies," Governor Parnell said. "As Alaskans, we honor and celebrate our traditional cultures. The state will join with Alaskans to make sure these languages live on."

Unfortunately, I was unable to attend the Bill Signing Ceremony in Dillingham at the Rural Providers Conference on May 28th. Because we have so many supporters based in Anchorage, such as the First Alaskans Institute, the Alaska Native Heritage Center, and the Alaska Federation of Natives to name a few, it was decided another ceremony on the passage of the bill will be held in Anchorage at the Alaska Native Heritage Center on June 14 from 12:30pm to 2:30pm. We hope you will be able to join as supporters of this bill. I am saddened to learn Governor Parnell will not be able to attend this ceremony. However I'm delighted that Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell and former Senator Georgiana Lincoln will be joining me celebrating the passage of the Alaska Native Language Preservation and Advisory Council. I was hoping Representative Alan Dick would be able to attend since he sponsored our companion bill and I appreciate his support in the House of Representatives expediting the movement of the bill. I'm looking forward to the celebration, and I greatly appreciate the Alaska Native Heritage Center for hosting this gathering.

Back in the 21st Legislative Session, former Senator Georgianna Lincoln sponsored a bill that addressed Native languages in schools. The measure mandates that school districts in which a majority of students are Alaska Natives shall establish a local Native language curriculum advisory board. If an advisory board recommends the establishment of a Native language curriculum, the school board in that district may initiate and implement such a curriculum. I feel confident the establishment of the advisory council will build on efforts and assist Alaskans in restoring and preserving our first languages in and outside of the classroom.

Redistricting Update

The Redistricting process continues. We've heard a lot of news about the proposed maps being challenged on reasonable and convincing arguments that they are unfair to Democrats and seem to favor conservative boundary lines. The maps pitted several Democrats against each other which can have a huge negative impact the amount of democratic and Alaska Native representation in the state.

The Redistricting process is not final due to some challenges to the boundary lines. The Supreme Court has approved the Amended Proclamation Plan above be considered for an Interim Plan for the next two years. The Department of Justice has 60 days to either approve or reject the proposed Interim Plan. It has been an honor to represent Senate District T.

Govenor Appoints Ryan to Aviation Advisory Board

Last month, Governor Parnell appointed Lee Ryan to the Aviation Advisory Board. The 11-member board advises the commissioner of the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities on aviation issues and consults with the commissioner on the selection of chief administrative officers of Anchorage and Fairbanks international airports, which comprise the Alaska International Airport System.

Ryan, of Unalakleet, is an airline captain from a family with long experience in Alaska aviation. He is chief pilot for Ryan Air, Inc., which was founded by his grandfather in 1953 and later run by his father. Ryan has logged more than 3,500 hours of flight time. He was a delegate to the Conference of Young Alaskans in 2006, is a member of the Arctic Winter Games Team Alaska, and has served on the Inuit Circumpolar Youth Conference's executive council. Ryan earned a bachelor's degree in business administration from the University of Alaska in 2004. He has served on the board since 2006, and is reappointed to a seat representing Northwest and Arctic Alaska.

Having met Lee Ryan on several occasions during session in Juneau, I support the Governor in Ryan's appointment. I wish Lee Ryan the best of luck and being a fellow pilot myself, I am confident he will be a great asset to the Aviation Advisory Board. Congratulations to Lee Ryan in his new seat.

BSNC in negotiations to buy Alaska Gold Co.

Native corporation signed purchase and sale agreement to take over Rock Creek gold mine

By Diana Haecker

In what seems to be the 11th hour, the fate of the failed Rock Creek gold mine under the ownership of Alaska Gold Company, subsidiary of the Canadian NovaGold Resources Inc. has turned from being permanently closed to having a second chance of going into production. Bering Straits Native Corporation signed a purchase and sale agreement to take over the mine from NovaGold for an undisclosed amount. BSNC had a prior agreement with NovaGold as the regional Native corporation owns the subsurface mining rights to the majority of the 3,500-acre Rock Creek mine and mill complex. Sitnasuak Native Corporation owns the surface rights. The transfer of the Rock Creek property to BSNC is contingent on closing conditions that include the successful completion of phase I of the reclamation plan.

Phase I entailed the removal of waters from the tailings storage facility, breaching the tailings facility dam and installing temporary covers over the tailings. Dept. of Natural Resources' dam engineer Charlie Cobb recently told The Nome Nugget that he performed an inspection on the dam notch and was satisfied with the work done. But the transfer of Rock Creek has not taken place yet and DNR officials still need to perform a closing inspection upon completion of phase I, says DNR large mine coordinator Sharmon Stambaugh.

According to BSNC CEO and president Gail Schubert, it is not set in stone yet whether BSNC will restart the mine or move forward with the final reclamation of the mine and mill complex that was built in 2006-2008. "Rock Creek alone is not worth developing from a financial standpoint," Schubert said. Production costs are high and the ore grade is low, but things look different when factoring in the mining prospect at Big Hurrah, about 60 miles east. "Big Hurrah with its higher ore body in combination with the Rock Creek ore could make the awarded a one-year contract to Nome Machine Works, owned by Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. Chief Matthew B. Johnson, for light duty and emergency vehicle repair and service at terms most private sector patrons of Nome's automotive repair shops would envy.

Under the terms of the bid, NMW offered to repair city vehicles at $85 an hour with a 25 percent markup on parts. The price went up $5 an hour over the $80 per hour cost during the last contracted period. NMW wanted—and will receive—$75 for wrecker callout service plus $2.50 per mile.

The repair contract currently covers 33 vehicles, including those used by Nome Police Department, Nome Volunteer Fire Dept., Nome Volunteer Ambulance Dept., Animal Control, Nome Rec Center, City administration, public works and Port of Nome.

NMW must follow manufacturer's recommendations in performing periodic maintenance and annual inspections for wear and needed repairs.

Solomon Gold appeals release of offshore mining tracts

By Sandra L. Medearis

A mining company headed by a member of the Alaska Mining Commission that pushes mining interests has wielded a state Superior Court appeal against the state Department of Natural Resources that would potentially increase Solomon Gold's holdings on underwater mining tracts offshore of Nome.

Robert M. Retherford has filed an administrative appeal saying that DNR Commissioner Daniel S. Sullivan was "arbitrary and capricious and abused his discretion" in dismissing an earlier appeal by gold miner Norm Stiles that cleared the way for winners of the September 2011 Nome offshore lease auction to pay for about a dozen leases and get on with the business of mining. Solomon Gold entered the second highest bid on some of those tracts. The appeal seeks, in effect, to block sale of the tracts to the highest bidders, including Mike Benchoff and Scott Meisterheim, and throw the option to the second highest bidders, including Solomon Gold.

Even with the appeal filed June 13, the DNR is continuing to process the highest bids on lease tracts won in the September auction, according to Kerwin Krause of the DNR Division of Mining, Land and Water. The DNR would not ask for an injunction or temporary restraining order on use of the affected tracts, Krause said. Krause said he had informed a miner who had paid for a tract Friday that Solomon Gold could ask the court for an injunction on the affected According to Krause, Solomon Gold would have to convince the Superior Court that written comment submitted to DNR on the Norm Stiles appeal in November was an appeal and that the provisions for an appeal in Alaska law were strict. An injunction or a temporary restraining order would block the award of the dozen tracts to bidders. Solomon Gold did not formally appeal Sullivan's release of the dozen lease tracts and the settling of the Stiles appeal, which would underlie the request for an injunction, Krause explained.

In the appeal court document, Solomon Gold asserted that DNR was arbitrary and capricious and abused discretion in not considering all arguments, including Solomon Gold's comments, received pertaining to the Stiles appeal.

Solomon Gold submitted a comment in the Stiles appeal issue, Krause acknowledged Monday. However, "Solomon Gold did not formally appeal. To stop the award of the released tracts, they would have to convince the court that the comment [on Stiles' appeal] was an appeal and ask the court for an injunction or temporary restraining order," Krause said.

Background

Robert M. Retherford, appointed by the Alaska Senate to the Alaska Mining Commission in 2006, along with several miners and investors, registered Solomon Gold on Sept. 23 to bid, win and develop placer gold deposits on State of Alaska offshore mining leases purchased in the Sept. 28, 2011 auction. Solomon Gold prevailed on six lease tracts for a total of approximately 2,600 acres of land for underwater gold mining. Alaska Mining Commission is an appointed panel that promotes mining resource development and resource access roads infrastructure. Putting the stymie to lawsuits against mining projects and ending tax-free status for mining watchdog organizations is one of the organization's advocacy priorities.

Brent Goodrum, director of the DNR Division of Mining, Land and Water, held in October that two winning miners - Scott Meisterheim and Michael Benchoff- whose statements of citizenship and other qualifications were not found on file following the Sept. 28, 2011 tract lease auction, could submit the documents within 10 days. In that determination, Goodrum stated "in considering the omissions of the two bidders, it appears that there may

Dear Editor,

Time moves differently in Nome and it's not just because the sun doesn't go down. Time is more elastic here, days, years and even decades past exist with as much or more presence as today's twomonth-long light.

Nome is the place old shipping containers and pickups go to die; characters and eccentrics accumulate, driving the old ramshackle trucks and sometimes even living in said container.

The world is smaller in Nome... Karinthy's postulate of six degrees of separation connecting you to any person on the planet is accepted down south, but not by me and certainly not in Nome; it is Twilight Zone here, you are connected to everyone by one degree, you just don't know it yet... Case in point:

I'm having breakfast at the Polar Café, meeting people, as I love to do. A guy from Puerto Rico sits down, Ramone. We talk about Puerto Rico, mofongo, radio stations and I mention I'm expecting a package from UPS. Ramone tells me he's UPS and asks my name, yeah he's seen the package and makes a quick call and then tells me the package will be dropped off here at breakfast. Cool! I love small towns. The package shows up in minutes.

I meet his friend Arnie, we talk, Arnie introduces me to tablemates Fred and Sue, says Fred is from Hawaii. We talk some more and I ask Fred does he miss Lau-Lau. Opihi and chicken long rice? Huge smile, and Fred asks are you from the islands, I reply I've spent a month on Kailua side with a good friend and his family. Fred says he's from Kailua side, I say actually Hoa-cana, Fred is staring intently, I'm from there, who's your friend? Domingos, Severnano Domingo I answer. Only one word from Fred: "Butch?" I am amazed! My friend is Butch, I tell him so, Fred replies "Butch is my best friend." OK so it's a small world, it happens right?

Later I'm talking with Sue from Wasilla, she was there since the '60s. I tell her my father who lives in Mississippi taught in Wasilla in the '60s, "Who's your father?" John Eaton I answer. "He was my favorite teacher!" Sue is beaming, I dial my father and hand her the phone. I watch a 59-year-old woman become a teenage girl before my eyes. Sue's smile is from ear to ear excitedly telling Mr. Eaton this and Mr. Eaton that. Eventually Sue hands me back the phone, her smile remains, the largest most intense smile I have seen in weeks. She is somewhere between a teenager and a woman and we talk of Alaska and the sixties and Wasilla and Nome and I think to myself: I love this place.

I start walking down Front Street, an old Toyota pickup with a toy horse attached to the roof pulls beside me and a Russian voice asks: "You want ride?" There are three in the front and the bed is full of debris, I climb in the back, there is no place to sit, so I stand in a small almost clear spot on an old tattered wet suit. I'm crouching holding onto the roof, it's OK though it's Nome. I look down at the wet suit for some reason it looks familiar, when we stop I inspect what is left of the suit. Though torn and cut into pieces, I know this suit! It was mine, I bought it new in 1986, how did it get here? I simply accept it is here because this is Nome, and wonder who do I know that I have yet to meet will I see here tomorrow?

Eternal Boil

It just won't go away. The Wien Building on Front Street still stands facing the eyes of the world like a boil on Nome's butt. It was condemned and placed on the abatement list last autumn to be gone by July. In April the City was told it would be deconstructed, yet at the end of June it is still here with no signs of leaving.

Rumor has it that the City was told that the owner thinks they have a buyer. Gimme a break! The building has been vacant for at least 20 years. It has an asbestos problem, is a firetrap, is a hotel for vermin and a lurking place for problems. Did we mention its ugly state of disrepair? The owners live in a fancy community out of state and apparently have no pride of ownership.

It's time to pull the plug on all the other buildings that are in shambles and on the top 10 list for abatement. Get a move on, City Hall. Get that wrecking ball swinging. Let's get all of our butt-ugly safety hazard buildings sent to the landfill. Let's do it now and not wait yet another -N.L.M.-

The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are pre-served forever as his legacy in the "McDaniel Family mine financially feasible," Schubert said, adding that mining would be done at a much smaller scale than originally proposed by NovaGold. BSNC land manager Matt Ganley added that the company is working through the numbers right now to figure out the ore grade and the production cost per ounce to make a sound decision on whether or not to go forward with re-starting the mine.

Schubert said that the main motivation to pursue the take-over of Rock Creek and the interest in buying Alaska Gold Company from NovaGold stems from BSNC's desire to create economic opportunities for BSNC shareholders as well as nonshareholder residents of the region. "Alaska Gold is one of the largest land owners in Nome and maybe if the mine doesn't pencil out, we have the option available to develop the gravel industry and pursue property development," Schubert said. If Rock Creek proves financially not feasible, Schubert said, BSNC would move forward with phase II of the reclamation plan and full closure and reclamation of the mine.

BSNC is currently in negotiations with NovaGold Resources to purchase Alaska Gold Co., which owns the Rock Creek mine, land and gravel resources as well as the Big Hurrah mining claim.

Harry Noah, former DNR commissioner and mining expert, advises BSNC on mining issues and gave the thumbs up to the acquisition of Rock Creek. As BSNC crunches the numbers, Schubert said, they are also in preliminary discussions with a number of bigger mining companies to potentially operate the mine as BSNC is not experienced to run a Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum.

This diary was painstakingly transcribed and proofed by museum staff from the original three by five inch journal book kept in Wilfred's pocket throughout the summer of 1900. The spelling errors are all his!

In 1898, the Three Lucky Swedes discovered gold at Anvil Creek. Over the next winter, miners left the Canadian Klondike and streamed into this area mushing dog teams, walking and even riding bikes down the frozen Yukon River to the Bering Sea. By the summer of 1899 all the creeks had been staked. In late July 1899, when we were called Anvil City, there were hundreds of frustrated miners with no ground to dig. As luck would have it, as the story goes, one of the soldiers who were here to help keep the peace ran his hand through the beach sands and found GOLD! There was gold on the beach!

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget newspaper, Wilfred and his brother Ed made some good money building and selling boats for other miners. However, the boys were here to seek their fortune in gold. They did some rocking but were not satisfied. On June 30, 1900 they pulled up their camp at Nome. They "rowed and towed" their boat about 8 miles west of Nome. Their timing was perfect. Smallpox had arrived in Nome on one of the ships...

July 1, 1900

We heard that the officials are going to quarantine the town, as there are 28 cases of smallpox. We got out in a hurry so as to be out of it. We had a very hard trip up the coast. We were nearly famished and went ashore and got some lunch from the Millards. Got our camp made in good shape. Expect the freight very soon.

July 2, 1900

Today is the warmest day we have had. I think it's about 90° F in the shade. We are resting today after our hard work yesterday. Wrote a letter home today. The steamer John Riely came up about 10 p.m. We went out in our boat and took soundings for her. We stayed on board till 1:30 a.m. The tide was out and she could not land.

Steamer landed at 7:00 a.m. She is now unloading freight. We worked very hard all day at stevedoring on the John Riely. Got most of our provisions and some of our machinery to camp. Got our stove set up and had a fine supper. Had scrambled eggs, ham, gravy, dried applesauce, hot biscuits and coffee. Went to bed at 10:30. Ed went off on the Riely to the schooner Vine.

July 4, 1900

Was awakened by the whistle of the old Riely at 5 a.m.. Went around to her and I am now on board her looking after our freight. This doesn't seem much like the Fourth as we see it in the States. Ed and Rouse returned from the Vine at 6 a.m. Had a big row with the freight men. Our freight is badly mixed and some missing. One barrel of pork 185 lbs is missing. I expect it was eaten on the Vine, as they ran short of grub. We brought our engine cylinders and generator up today. Had a hard job getting the parts loaded. Landed the load safely and got them up on the beach. Spent a rather quiet 4th of July. Heard some shooting of giant powder downtown. Quite a number of tents are decorated with flags.

July 5, 1900

The sea is rolling up in great style this morning. We cannot use our boat. We carried our pipe to our claim today. We have to carry our stuff about ½ mile. We put the flywheels on the shaft and rolled them along the beach. We are quite tired tonight. We have nothing to bring now except the bedplate and 12 barrels of oil. We are going to town this morning. Mr. Tenny said he would go with us, but he has not put in an appearance yet. The sea is not quite so rough this morning. A cold land breeze is blowing. Got to Nome City about 11 a.m. after two hours walk. Could not find a stick of our lumber after walking the town over. We gave up looking for it and started for camp. When we met a fellow who told us where the Vine discharged. After a long hunt we found it. Several pieces are missing. Found our syrup but could not locate the pork. Hired two men with team to haul it to the claim. Paid them $15 for hauling the lumber and $5 for hauling the engine base down from Phillips. Also paid $3 toll to get across the bridge over Snake River. The sea is getting rougher. A gasoline launch was driven ashore and sunk last night. Several small boats were stove in also. A man killed himself yesterday. I weighed today and have gained 17 pounds since leaving Dutch Harbor.

on who or whether anyone keeps tab on repair bills and work performed. Bahnke's response seemed to indicate that department heads, but no one qualified person reviewed work.

"I sign the checks and I approve the payments," Bahnke said. "Each department watches its own vehicles."

One of the cars that NMW will maintain is the car used by NPD Chief John J. Papasodora. In a proposed contract extension contract—not approved by the Council yet—Papasodora may take his car beyond the Nome city limits, but must park it in the city over night.

"Even go fishing?" Andersen asked.

"Yes," said Bahnke.

Because of his contracted 24-hour on-call schedule during the last contract, Papasodora could not drive his work vehicle out of town limits.

The Council dragged feet on extension of the contract pending a job evaluation to be performed by Bahnke, city manager.

A copy of the proposed contract extension, valid through Sept. 15, 2015, was not available for public inspection, but according to the resolution to approve, Papasodora's salary would be $101,623 for the first year of extension with a 3 percent increase the second and third years. Additionally, the chief would accrue 20 hours personal leave per month, up from 15 hours per month.

The Council would consider the contract at their next regular meeting, they said, some noting that the public should be aware of the proposed extension.

"The public should have a chance to comment. If they know it is coming up, they might have some comments," Council member Louis Green, Sr. said.

The position is exempt from Public Employees' Retirement System, Bahnke noted. "That saves us a lot of money," she said.

Nome Mayor Denise Michels early in Monday's regular Nome Council meeting stumped for a "yes" vote on a ballot initiative before the voters in August to create a state board to review and approve regulations to implement a coastal program.

According to pamphlets on the pro side of the question, a coastal program would give coastal states and communities a voice in deciding what coastal uses and resources are important and establish policies for activities that would affect use of resources.

An existing Coastal Zone Management Program died when state Legislature did not renew it in 2011. Proponents say the lack of a program weakens oil spill requirements. Alaska has almost 40 percent of the nation's coastline, but does not currently have a management program to give the thousands who live along the coasts a voice in decision-making.

Such a board would comprise nine locally nominated public members from nine coastal areas and four state commissioners from departments of Natural Resources, Environmental Conservation, Fish and Game and Commerce, Community and Economic Development.

She was in a bind, Michels told the Council, as the Alaska Municipal League was pushing the measure, but the Resource Development Council of which she is a member was fighting passage of the ballot initiative.

The Alaska Federation of Natives also has endorsed the coastal initiative

An organization formed to oppose the measure, Vote No on 2, says in a press release provided to the Council that the measure is "confusing, poorly written and could easily hamstring development activities statewide."

Therefore, before Michels appeared as a person endorsing either of the opposing positions, she wanted to check the Council's attitudes on the question.

An organization advocating passage of the coastal initiative, the Alaska Sea Party, has prepared an information sheet comparing the ACMP initiative to former programs. That paper will be available at Nome City Hall or online at the Alaska Sea Party Web site.

Before she took a position, Councilwoman Mary Knodel said, she would like to know more and to know the language of the ballot question. The Council tabled the issue pending more consideration.

In other business, the Coun-

• Unanimously approved a lease agreement with Seakers, Inc., the firm that maintains port fuel lines and those of Bonanza Fuel and Crowley Petroleum Distribution. The property comprises 9,600 sq. ft. at Port of Nome at $288 per week.

• Stamped final approval on the Nome Joint Utility System spending year 2012 operations and maintenance budget for $13.5 million, leaving a net operating margin of $479,082.

• Heard a report from NJUS' manager John K. Handeland, who said that drilling under the river to move underground the power lines is progressing. The utility must move lines from the water plant to Belmont Point. The lines currently run along the old Snake River Bridge that will be demolished and replaced by a new bridge in a different location across Seppala Drive.

· Heard a plea from Handeland who wears a hat on the Nome Museum and Library Commission that people not respond to an ad from yet another reality show scheme that asked people to round up the area's historical artifacts and antiques and send them off to "Alaska Pickers." "I would discourage anyone in town from responding to the big ad in the newspaper," Handeland said. "We have a lot of history in this area, and it should stay here. We don't have to see the history of our area go out on barges." Handeland urged people with historical items to donate them to the museum. "If you can make money, why would you want to donate something?" Andersen asked. Historical items need to remain in their historical context, Handeland responded "We've all enjoyed these things and need to leave them in their natural location for the next generation to enjoy."

• Congratulated Handeland after Nome Ambulance Dept. Director Vickie Erickson commended him with a plaque, certificate and personal coffee cup noting his 21 years' service on the volunteer ambulance crew.

• Heard Cameron Glendenning an executive producer of Bering Sea Gold reality show, say he wanted to open a window of communication with the Council and town. "We're here to ingratiate ourselves to the town," he said. "After the fact," Andersen commented. The City administration and Council credit the reality show with the glut of gold seekers coming to Nome this summer, seen as burden to service providers and a welcome rise in tourists by those engaged in "mining the miners."

• And finally, the Nome Common Council has passed its final budget measure at a special meeting June 13. The panel inadvertently missed approving the Nome Municipal General Fund Appropriation Budget on June 6 after amending it several times but skipping a final step to approve the main motion. The Council, also on June 13, officially set the property tax mill rate underlying the budget at 11 mills.

MIDNIGHT SUN PARADE - Nomeites rang in the Midnight Sun festivities with the annual parade. The weekend starts off with a barn dance on Thursday night, followed by the Gold Dust Dash Run, the parade, live music, the bank robbery, Lions Club chicken feed and the annual Nome River Raft Race.

Clouds cover Midnight Sun, but don't dampen the festivities fun

By Diana Haecker

Cloudy weather and an on-againand-off-again slight drizzle couldn't keep the enthusiastic Nome Midnight Sun crowd from celebrating the festivities. For 12 years, the Nome Arts Council's Midnight Sun Folk Fest is the centerpiece of events peppered throughout the week around summer solstice. A barn dance kicks off the festivities at Old St. Joe's Hall and serious celebrations begin on Friday as the guest band arrives and plays for kids at the Nome Elementary School. All the while, the smell of barbequed chicken wafted down Front Street, where the Bering Sea Lion's Club set up coolers with 1,600 pounds of chicken that were fed over two days to Nomeites that couldn't stand the torture of the delicious aroma tickling their noses.

On Saturday, around 11 o'clock, Nomeites lined Front Street for the Midnight Sun parade with the fitting theme "The Nome Gold Rush 2012" The Nome Police chief and the Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance Departments were the vanguard to a large train of floats. True to the gold rush theme, many were featuring dredges, gold pans, picks and shovels, and the Community Baptist Church's float reminded miners that "Jesus is more than gold." Other themes included boating safety; the library kids were out in full force and the CAMP department spread their message of healthy living.

The "Arctic Icans" cancer survivor group truck had an unusual passenger in reindeer Velvet Eyes, who came along to support the cause.

Gail Philips and Allen Rylander led the float loaded with graduates from the class of 1962 and the class of 1982 rode in a truck sporting the Nome-Beltz blue and white colors. The parade started at the state building, went west on Front Street, turned up to Bering Street, took a right at First and looped back onto Front Street.

After the parade, the usual suspects, plus a "new" Belle, made their way down Front Street to hold up the Wells Fargo bank. Carrying the signs of the times "We are the 99 percent", the "bandits" managed to make it

At that time, the thermometer at the old Fed building read 60°F and the skies started to grow darker. A slight drizzle came down as the crowd moseyed to the East Beach where the Rotary Club put on their annual Polar Bear Swim. A huge bonfire was readied to warm up the bodies that dared the dash into the cold Bering Sea.

SIGN OF THE TIMES - Aidan Smith occupies Front Street during the annual midnight sun bank robbery.

Folk Fest

In the past, Folk Fest founder Carol Gales alternated Alaskan and lower 48 bands to delight music aficionados in Nome over the years. This year's chosen guest band was the Caleb Klauder Country band from Portland featuring classical honky-tonk country music. For the first time since its inception 12 years ago, Gales has handed over the reins and let somebody else organize the Folk Fest events. While Gales and her partner Jim Dory were still volunteering, Laura Collins was in charge. Although everything went off without a hitch - at least to the unsuspecting observer - Collins wasn't so sure if she'll sign up for the same task again next year. "I guess, we'll see," she said. The Caleb Klauder country band gave a concert on Friday night at the Elementary School, played at the Mainstage music performances on Saturday and at the Board of Trade on Saturday night. The Main stage music performances featured local talent, new performers as well as perennials. There were the Tenhoff brothers singing about gold mining in Nome while Discovery Channel cameras recorded their every move. There was Nomeite Jim Abbott teaming up with Hawaiians, named themselves The Kine and strummed the guitars and ukulele. Sarah Hofstetter, her husband Phil Hofstetter and friends Dave Coler, Ian McRae and Kellen Baker on the tuba played a song about last year's storm and the feeling of being trapped inside while listening to KNOM for the latest storm surge update. Lance Johnson teamed up with his visiting nephew Silas Wade while Nome grown Karen McLane came back from Arizona to sing a few songs. New Nome transplant Cathian Covert, wife of the new Evergreen helicopter pilot, gave her debut as an accomplished singer and guitarist.

About 24 different gigs entertained Nomeites at the main stage event with a bit of excitement sprinkled in as the fire alarm went off and everybody evacuated out of the Nome Elementary School until officials determined that it was a false

Once the audience streamed back into the NES gym and auditorium, everything was back to normal and the show went on until the lights went out after Arlo Hannigan, the last performer on the main stage of the Midnight Sun Folk Fest 2012.

BANK ROBBERY - Sheriff Wyatt Earp, in front of the casket, brought law and order back to Nome by defeating the bank robbers during a staged shoot-out.

Mosquito bites: How to avoid and treat this summer ailment

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The mosquito, one of the world's smallest insects, is one of the world's deadliest killers. Worldwide millions of people die every year from diseases carried by the mosquito including malaria, dengue fever, yellow fever, and encephali-

Fortunately, mosquitoborne diseases are rare in Alaska. Cases of malaria and encephalitis radically in people who have returned to Alaska after being bitten by mosquitoes in high-risk parts of the world, but in rural Alaska, the mosquito bite is more a source of annoyance than a source of serious medical problems.

The itch associated with a mosquito bite is actually an allergic reaction to proteins, literally digestive enzymes, injected at the time of a bite. The reaction tends to be localized and rarely lasts more than a few hours. In very rare cases, the mosquito bite can lead to a severe anaphylactic reaction resulting in a medical emergency causing difficulty breathing. People in this situation should seek immediate medical intervention.

Interestingly, allergic reactions to mosquito bites tend to lessen in strength over a lifetime. Adults exposed to many bites generally react with less severity than children or infants who have had only a limited number of bites. In this way, each mosquito bite is like a small allergy shot that desensitizes the body to fu-

Mosquitoes are not too choosy. However, experts say mosquitoes are more attracted to males, people with type-O blood, and obese individuals. Conversely, there is some evidence that people who take a B-vitamin called thiamine are less attractive to mosquitoes. So if you find yourself in the outdoors OCTOR in a crowd where the mosquito has a choice, consider standing next to thin females with type A or B blood who have been taking vitamins (of course this is not official medical advice).

Mosquitoes are also attracted to exhaled carbon dioxide, certain perfumes, and body heat.

Mosquito repellents come in three forms: topical repellants, fabric repellents, and physical barriers.

Topical repellents work by interfering with the ability of a mosquito to recognize open skin. DEET in concentrations up to 35 percent may be used on anyone over two months old. In general, use the lowest concentration needed for the duration of possible exposure. DEET 10 percent will last about two hours. DEET should not be applied to the hands of children who may transfer the chemical to sensitive tissue in the eyes or mouth. Caution should be used during application because DEET may degrade certain plastics and fabrics.

A newer chemical called Picaridin, or KBR 3023, is nearly odorless and better tolerated by people who react poorly to DEET. Picaridin is just as effective as DEET at simi-

Oil of Lemon Eucalyptus is comparable to DEET at low concentrations but should not be used on children under three years old because is has a strong sedating effect and has been associated with adverse effects in young children.

Products containing Permethrin are available for treating physical barriers like clothing, shoes, tents, and bed nets. Permethrin should not be applied directly to the skin.

If prevention fails, bites may be treated with hydrocortisone cream or calamine lotion to ease the itch. Experts from the Mayo Clinic describe a homemade topical paste that can be made by mixing equal parts water and powdered meat tenderizer. Another old dermatology trick is to apply very warm water (hot enough to feel uncomfortable but not hot enough to burn the skin) to the bite for a few seconds. Some people find the opposite approach works better and recommend applying ice to the affected area to reduce inflammation.

THE NOME NUGGET

Stronger reactions can be treated with an antihistamine like diphenhydramine (Benadryl), chlorpheniramine maleate (Chlor-Trimeton, Actifed), loratadine (Claritin) or cetirizine (Zyrtec).

It is not a bad idea to stock the cabin or camp first aid kit with one or more of these treatments. Preventing, or when necessary, properly treating the common mosquito bite will make summer more enjoyable for everyone.

have been some misunderstanding during the sign-in process the day of the sale that contributed to the incomplete bids. Consequently, the omissions are determined to be due to excusable inadvertence."

Both Benchoff and Meisterheim said they had filled out the statements as required before the auction.

Foul!

Norm Stiles of Nome appealed Goodrum's determination. He was second-highest bidder on a tract won by Meisterheim. This tied up about a dozen tracts upon which Benchoff and Meisterheim had bids pending Sullivan's ruling on the issue. In February, Meisterheim's business consultant, Kathleen Sullivan (no relation to the commissioner), notified the DNR that Meisterheim had withdrawn his bid in favor of Stiles, who then agreed to recall his appeal. DNR staff made clear that the agreement was between the parties and accepted the withdrawal of Stiles appeal and the withdrawal of Meisterheim's bid on Tract 4.

Sullivan on May 14 closed Stiles' appeal and signaled the Division of Mining, Land and Water to begin processing documents and bid results on affected tracts and ruled the miners' post-auction statements of qualifications to be good. However, Sullivan said that an appellant affected by the administrative order and decision could appeal to the Superior Court within 30 days consistent with Alaska law.

Solomon Gold filed on the deadline June 13. The administrative appeal lists 17 affected bidders in the action.

Retherford, Solomon Gold president and a director, owns 49.5 percent of the stock. Solomon Gold has direct links and a shared address and legal representation with geological services and mining company Alaska Earth Sciences, headed also by Retherford.

Craig Coggins, vice president, holds 15 percent of shares in Solomon Gold. Kevin Gray holds a small percentage—less than five percent, and is secretary and treasurer of the gold mining company.

Norton Sound fishermen to receive record high prices for red king crab

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound commercial red king crab catches will fetch record high prices this season for the second year in a row. Norton Sound Seafood Products recently announced prices of $5.50 per pound for red king crab at the dock in Nome, and $5.25 a pound for catches delivered to tender vessels beginning July 2. Dock prices for red king crab were $5.29 a pound in 2011 and $3.77 a pound in 2010, the company noted. NSSP is owned by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game has set the 2012 guideline harvest level for the summer red king crab fishery at 465,450 pounds with 34,910 pounds allocated to the Community Development Quota fishery and 430,540 pounds to the open access fishery.

"Both the open access and CDQ [fisheries] will open at the same time," reports Jim Menard, ADF&G area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue. "I'm guessing June 28 or 29 at noon will be the opening date."

If the 2012 quota is fully harvested, Norton Sound crabbers could receive more than $2.5 million, noted NSSP. They were paid $2.016

Sitnasuak Native Corp. has new board members

The Sitnasuak Native Corporation Board of Directors announced the election of two new board members. L.T. Trigg and Mark Allred both have three-year terms. They replaced Homer Hoogendorn and Janice Doherty.

The 11-member board's new officers are Jason Evens, chairman; Gloria Karmun 1st vice-chair; Andrew Miller, Jr. 2nd vice-chair; Neal W. Foster, secretary; Robert K. (Bobby) Evans, treasurer.

Other board members are Louis H. Green, Jr., Barbara Amarok and Crystal Andersen-Booth.

million for the 2011 harvest of nearly 401,000 pounds of red king crab, according to ADF&G figures. The department set the 2011 guideline harvest level at 358,000 pounds.

Last year the summer commercial red king crab season lasted just 33 days, compared to 58 days in 2010, according to the 2011 Norton Sound Summer Crab Season Summary issued May 3, 2012 by ADF&G. Both the summer open access fishery and CDQ fishery began June 28, 2011. The last CDQ delivery was made July 8 when 100 percent of the 26,500-pound CDQ allocation had been harvested. The final delivery in the open access fishery was made July 31 for a total harvest of 373,990 pounds of red king crab.

PUBLIC SAFETY MESSAGE from Chief J. Pa-

Several weeks ago, I sent out a public safety message about securing property and making it more difficult for theft to occur. In the recent past, the incidence of theft has increased several hundred percent with few of these incidents actually being reported to the Nome Police. Property targeted by uneagets include his valence property targeted by uneagets include his valence property targets. geted by suspects include bicycles; personal property such as purses, cds, wallets, phones, etc; and electronics such as computers, nooks, iPods, etc. All of these items are difficult to identify and easily converted to make identification more difficult.

NPD needs your help to safeguard your property. Though we will do everything possible to re-cover your property if it is stolen, many times even the best efforts will not achieve that result, as stolen property is just one of the many issues that officers deal with. The best way to deal with issue is to prevent the theft from occurring.

Invest in a bicycle lock and lock your bicycle up so that the wheels will not roll. Somebody carrying a bicycle that is secured with a bicycle lock is what we refer to as a 'clue' and allows us to stop and investigate the suspicious activity. When you lock you bicycle, lock it to something that doesn't move - like a tall post or immovable object. Finally, register your bicycle with NPD so that if we recover it or see someone carrying it away, then we can contact you and get it back to you.

In the same manner, lock your car doors and don't leave anything of value in plain sight. This would include wallets, purses, iPods, camping gear, knives or any other items that might be attentive to the Development. tractive to steal. By locking the doors, you make it harder for someone to steal your property. Also remember to take the keys out of the vehicle – including ATVs. Leaving the keys in any vehicle is an invitation to theft.

Keep an inventory of valuables in your home NPD will publish a simple inventory sheet for property owners to use where you can list serial numbers, descriptions, and value of items that you own. In the event that those items are lost or stolen, we can then enter then into a statewide database that may help us recover the property Many times property is found and turned into NPD, but we never identify the owner because it either wasn't reported as lost/stolen or the description that we have is not specific enough to identify the article. If you keep an inventory, make multiple copies and store them in separate locations.

Finally, please report theft to the Nome Police Department. If we don't know it's missing, then we can't look for it, recover it and get it back to you. Though we make every effort to monitor Nome Announce, it would make it much easier for all involved to have a report to work from.

The Nome Police are here to promote a safe and secure community. Working with our citizens READY, SET, GO! - Participants of the Bering Sea Lion's Club Nome River Raft Race rush into the Nome River to get a good start on Sunday, June 23.

Raft race tests the limits of competitors

By Amelia Cooper

As the mighty hands of time crank the seasons forward, we find ourselves once again resting on the cusp of summer. To celebrate the midsummer, the people of Nome cobbled a naval fleet for themselves—a fleet with which to conquer the Nome River.

Participants met at mile 13.5 of the Kougarok Road on a rainy Sunday afternoon to float their rafts for the annual Bering Sea Lion's Club Nome River Raft Race. It was 57°F

The wind was calm, the mosquitoes buzzed about and the water was shallow. The smell of the wet earth spun itself into the fog.

John Handeland sounded the megaphone siren at 1 p.m., marking the start of the journey. Nine rafts plus a bunch of canoes and recreational floating devices were released into the stream. The competitive rafters were allowed two hours to complete the race, Handeland told them. "Four hours!" the rafters shouted back.

The first challenge for the rafters was to make it past the bridge past Banner Creek, where spectators waited with buckets and tubs full of water. Some rafters futilely armed themselves with water guns, others covered their heads with trashcans or blue tarps. Few made it through dry.

The journey was trying, but coolers full of light beer whetted the competitive spirit.

The dry spring left the river shallower than usual. Raw gravel banks shown through the current at places once knee-deep. Rafts ran up on rocks jutting from the stream, and many rafters had to get out and push. Muskox Sally, manned by Aidan Smith, Shayla Alarie, Andrew James, and Arlo Hannigan, lost their cargo and the comfort of two crewmembers to the river in a collision with an inflatable canoe two hours into the race.

Steve Longley's vessel had a solid lead for the entire race. Once again, they finished the race in first place.

The rain was beating into the river by 4 p.m., when the other competitors were nearing the finish. As rafts came one-by-one around the bend, water slicking over their paddles and the river rocks not far below, rafters joked about turning around. Some vomited as they floated by, some huddled for warmth.

"It's a sad day for the musk ox," Hannigan sighed with foam musk ox horns drooping from his ears. His raft mate was paddling with a water gun.

With little choice other than to let the current take them to the end of the race, most rafters persevered.

Though rations ran low, and two oxen fell, with no snakebites, casualties, or outbreaks of dysentery, participants went home safely from 2012 Nome River Raft Race.

Shall Richard Foster Building include Kawerak's museum?

By Sandra L. Medearis

"They hear them knocking, but they can't come in," say some Nome Common Council members on whether Kawerak Inc. will be allowed to join forces with the City of Nome in designing and occupying space in the new Richard Foster Building.

Kawerak needs a museum-quality space of about 3,500 square feet for display and storage associated with its Beringia Center of Culture and Science

The Nome Common Council, City of Nome administrators and the Nome Museum and Library Commission have been working with architect Terry Hyer on design stages and site selection to invest a $16.5 million appropriation for a combined museum and library facility to provide a larger space for Nome's collection of historical items and a library facility at a site away from potential flooding and water damage. The City's library and museum are currently squeezed into 3,600 square feet, with artifacts stored off site and out of public view. Kawerak has been planning for a regional cultural center. State representatives have made it clear that only one facility would be funded.

Operating budgets for the existing library and museum run around $35,000.

Hyer provided in a June 27 work session several scenarios to include Kawerak or not. Kawerak favors an option that shows Kawerak having 3,300 sq. ft., the library 3,086 sq. ft., and the museum taking 10,600 sq. ft., for a total footprint of around 17,000 sq. ft. Library Director Marguerite La Riviera said $3,086 sq. ft. would be sufficient for library pro-

Planning commission makes camp legal

By Sandra L. Medearis

It took several months, but Mitch Erickson of Nome Gold Alaska has finally secured approval from the City to host campers at the company's industrial campground west of Dredge 6.

The Nome Planning Commission approved a conditional use permit at a special meeting June 28 to allow residential use for the ground that had been zoned as an industrial district. Nome Gold Alaska had fulfilled all the requirements set by the planning panel earlier in June to clear the way for camping use by gold seekers seeking accommodations on the cheap, except for setting up the appointed number of portable toilets. Last week there were only two standing on the campground instead of half a dozen, as required on a list of work orders prior to the camp's land use approval.

Two sanitation stations seemed to be sufficient for now, Erickson told the planning commission. The NPC gave Erickson preliminary permission to open the gates of the camp pending public notice and public hearing by the NPC on the conditional use. Erickson estimated June 28 that there were roughly 75 people with tents, yurts and shipping containers set up.

With sanitation services in place, maybe demand could set the number, NPC President Tom Sparks suggested.

"Maybe Allen [Maxwell, building inspector] can keep track of that; maybe more than six are needed," Sparks said.

Commissioner Charles Weiss suggested that the commission strike the six portable toilets language and put something in the specs about "a sufficient number with change as needed." Hence, the commission unanimously voted in the conditional use measure for the camp, with the flexible number of "Port-a-Potties" in the language.

Approval of the campground infers a site plan, trash receptacles with pickup as needed, a beach access road developed and maintained, access suitable for emergency vehicles,

Organizations prepare for increased Arctic shipping

By Amelia Cooper

The International Union for Conservation of Nature hosted a brainstorm session at the Aurora Inn in Nome last week. The goal of the workshop was to identify ways to minimize the potential danger to Ecological and Biological Significant Areas, ESBAs for short, along the Bering Strait associated with increased Arctic shipping traffic.

Fourteen presentations and a day of "breakout sessions" led the representatives of federal agencies, conservation groups and Native non-profit organizations down many

The group debated whether the measures to protect sensitive areas should be mandatory or voluntary. Should there be laws or merely guidelines? Coast Guard retiree Ed Page advocated the voluntary approach, proposing that ships install an Automatic Identification System to allow the U.S. Coast Guard and federal government to track ships' routes, speed and location, among other things.

USCG vessels already use AIS tracking. "It has changed the way we communicate," Cmdr. James Houck, one of the presenters, said. Instead of relaying GPS location and coordinates, they can identify and locate vessels from the name alone through AIS tracking. Page compared the AIS to the speed-tracking signs on some roadways. A sign shoots a mi-

Letter to the Editor

I was talking to someone the other day that wanted me to address cancer. Although cancer is scary, it is treatable. You may lost a piece of yourself, but you are still here—you are still alive.

Stinkweed cures over 100 different illnesses. As I have said—they told my grandma and R.I. that they didn't have much time to live, yet it kept them alive for 25 years and they made as much as they could out of their days. I respected that very much and them also. The would drink stinkweed two to three times a day. They say you can get the stinkweed wet, and then apply it to the area that hurts/tumor is for at least 15 minutes at a time, and it makes it go away. Quit being so stubborn, I think it tastes better than the cough syrup and if you give it to them as babies then they don't mind taking it. All you have to do is boil water and let the stinkweed seep in the water for a while. It seems to grow everywhere. Also, should have faith in God. After all he put us here for a reason.

My son was saying how he missed his grandma and uncle. He said at least they were nice to him. Like the rest of the people in his age group-I keep telling him I won't be around forever, so he has to go to training/school now. That the kids think that the things they have to do are really tiring, back when we had to do about three times the work.

I'm tired of the punk ass people thinking they could beat no people and get away with it—the so called Justice System sure aren't doing there job.

So many victims, with the preps doing so little time. If you feel so small to have to do things to a person—instead of a thing—then I guess you had better find something constructive to do then.

I wrote to our legislators and I hope some of you will too, and told them that I think it would be a good idea to have a pipeline follow the Iditarod trail or go from Fairbanks area going toward Unalakleet, Nome, on up to Kotzebue or somewhere, with sub-hubs along the way so that the other communities could benefit from it too. There is no reason why they can't build a bigger refinery in Alaska and do the pipeline as such. If Alaska grossed 4.2 billion (not million) in 2010, then we must have money to do that.

Anyway, yea, the greens are out. Remember to give some to the elders; they would love to have

Be careful—I think you'd all like to enjoy the summer activities instead of being laid up.

As always, Karen Nanouk P.O. Box 282 Unalakleet, AK 99684

Editorial

Oh what a relief!

Just when we thought nothing could go right for the little guy, and we listened to the stooges and the Tea Party goons spew their hate message the Supreme Court did the unexpected. They ruled in favor of the "Affordable Health Care Act."

In a fit of wishful reporting the Ultra Conservative news newarks reported its defeat. But wait, they were wrong. They got it wrong. The Supreme Court upheld the law. Yeah! Oh it's so sad to listen to the hate-filled rants. Boo Hoo!

Sure there needs to be some changes, but that's OK. Just look at the current health care mess with insurance companies thinking they are banks. Yes, it really is refreshing to look forward to a health care law with the good of the Nation at heart.

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget Newspaper, Wilfred and his brother Ed finally rounded up all of their freight which had arrived on separate ships several days apart. They received their syrup but not their pork and who the heck stole the lumber? Does this sound familiar to any of you 2012 Nome gold miners? Anyhow, the McDaniels had yet to start sluicing for gold! They were still working out the bugs...

July 8th, 1900

The night was very cold. Windy and cloudy this morning. Today is Sunday but we will work as the time is flying. We will set the pump today. Got our pump set and the suction pipe laid. We quit work at 4:30, as today is Sunday. Wrote some letters today.

July 9th, 1900

The night was very cold and windy. The weather may clear up today. The wind still blows but the clouds are breaking. Got our engine and scraper running and they work splendidly. We also built our sluice boxes. We expect to be running Wednesday if all is well. Had a pleasant day, sun was shining all afternoon. Took a snapshot at a 16-dog team on the beach. The team came to haul our oil at 8 this eve. Paid the driver 10 dollars. The tide was out so we fixed our foot valve and strainer and put the lower joint of our suction pipe out in the surf. Worked until about 11PM.

Midnight Sun Parade winners

The Nome Convention and Visitor Bureau and the Nome Chamber of Commerce sponsored the Midnight Sun Parade "best in show" competition. Out of 19 floats that entered the parade, "Hawaii in Alaska" won the Judge's Choice award; The XYZ Center and Quyanna Care won the "Best float representing the theme" category; best bicycle went to Asaaluk Irelan and Best Skateboard went to Jared Wiggins. Judges for the Parade included Matthew Guiffré from KNOM as well as two visiting tourists to Nome, Sherry Bottoms and Janice Stango. Cash prizes for this years winners were donated by The Nome Chamber of Commerce.

Shell rigs are northbound, Greenpeace follows

Shell reports that its fleet including drill rigs Noble Discoverer and Kulluk left Seattle on June 27 and are traveling to Dutch Harbor. Their ultimate destinations are Shell offshore leases in the Beaufort and Chukchi Seas. On June 25, Shell conducted a test of a capping stack to be deployed if a blow out or oil spill happens. The Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement was on hand to witness the test. Upon arrival in Dutch Harbor, the fleet wait for open water to make entry into the Beaufort and Chukchi Seas. According to Pete Slaiby, VP Alaska, once open water allows, the rigs will sail to their respective theaters and commence exploratory drilling.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals on June 27 denied a request from Greenpeace to stay an injunction against the environmental group. In a federal District Court ruling the court banned Greenpeace from occupying any of 19 vessels Shell plans to use for its upcoming drilling campaign. Greenpeace appealed the ruling, but also asked the court to stay the injunction while the appeal played out. The Greenpeace ship Esperanza is shadowing the Shell fleet, and on the mission to document Arctic environmental conditions.

The Dept. of Interior must still issue final drilling permits for Shell.

Lt. Governor holds hearings on ACMP

Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell has scheduled ten public hearings on the Alaska Coastal Management Program ballot initiative. After State Legislators allowed the ACMP to sunset last year, the Alaska Sea Party formed and initiated a ballot initiative to resurrect the program. Treadwell is now holding public hearings on the ballot initiative, but has not scheduled a meeting for Nome. Non-coastal communities like Wasilla and Fairbanks are scheduled for hearings. A hearing in Anchorage is scheduled on July 9 at 9 am until 2 pm for a statewide teleconference and Nome and regional residents can call in to participate in the hearing.

Interior finalizes five-year plan for new oil & gas leases

Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar and Bureau of Ocean Energy Management director Tommy Beaudreau last week announced the release of a proposed final offshore oil and gas leasing program for 2012-2017 that makes all areas with the highest-known resource potential – including frontier areas in the Alaska Arctic – available for oil and gas exploration. The 15 scheduled potential lease sales contained in the plan will occur in six planning areas – the Western and Central Gulf of Mexico, the portion of the Eastern Gulf Of Mexico not currently under Congression almoratorium, and the Chukchi Sea, Beaufort Sea and Cook Inlet Planning Areas offshore Alaska.

For offshore Alaska, the proposed program schedules three potential sales – one each in the Chukchi Sea and Beaufort Sea Planning Areas that span the Alaska Arctic, and one in the Cook Inlet Planning Area off of south-central Alaska.

News Briefs

"We are committed to moving forward with leasing offshore Alaska, and scheduling those sales later in the program allows for further development of scientific information on the oil and gas resource potential in these areas and further study of potential impacts to the environment," said Deputy Secretary of the Interior David J. Hayes. "We must reconcile energy resource development with the sensitive habitats, unique conditions and important other uses, including subsistence hunting and fishing, that are present in Alaska waters."

The Proposed Final Program reaffirms existing protections for Arctic coastal areas by continuing to exclude certain areas from leasing, including a 25-mile buffer area near the coast of the Chukchi, as well as two subsistence whaling areas in the Beaufort near Barrow and Kaktovik, Alaska. The program also identifies an additional exclusion area in the Chukchi, near Barrow, that will not be made available for leasing because of input received from Native Alaskan communities and because the area is known to be of particular importance for subsistence hunting and fishing. With respect to all other areas in the Arctic that are open to oil and gas exploration and development in the Proposed Final Program, BOEM will identify targeted areas to offer in the lease sales based on information the agency will gather

Mushers sign up for 2013 Iditarod

Iditarod fans know that June 30 is a special day. It marks the first chance to sign up for next year's Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race and last Saturday, 54 mushers plopped their entry fee of $3,000 on the table. Current champion Dallas Seavey, along with former champs Lance Mackey, Martin Buser, Jeff King, John Baker and Mitch Seavey signed up as well as Nome/Nenana musher Aaron Burmeister. Cim Smyth and Jeff King won their entry fees back in a drawing.

Mining firm drills near Council

Canadian mining company Millrock plans to drill six shallow holes at their Council claim to test surface gold anomalies and gold-bearing veins discovered by prospecting crews at the Elkhorn prospect in the past. The project is budgeted at $1 million and is expected to begin in mid-July. Kinross is earning in to this project.

Was taken sick on the evening of the 12th with a severe attack of indigestion. Suffered all night and was no better in the morning. Walked a mile to Dr. Whitney's camp and got some medicine. Cost me five dollars. Returned to camp and slept all day.

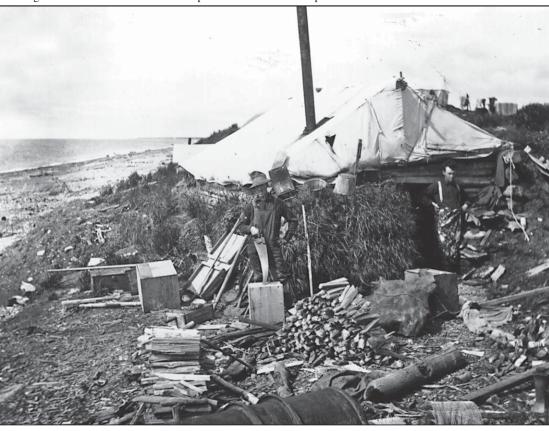

July 14th, 1900

I feel better this morning but am very weak. Did not do much today. We started sluicing at 3PM. Our pump don't work just right. Can't get enough water. The ground prospects fine. Can see gold in our boxes this evening. We are very anxious to get to work and have a clean up so that we can tell how it will pay. There is a report that 2000 men have asked government aid to get out of here. Lots of cold feet here. Also a report of 54 cases of smallpox in the grams.

Councilwoman Josie Stiles, also a member of the Nome Museum and Library Commission, said no to combining the two museums: As a Native herself, she said, she acknowledged the importance of preserving Alaska Native culture, but she wanted to see Bering Straits Native Corp., Nome Eskimo Community and Sitnasuak Native Corp. working together with "the same vision"

The City had worked long and hard to plan the museum, and she did not want to see another organization coming in at the last minute to absorb space from Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum programs, she said.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel had a similar opinion that she did not want to see inclusion of Beringia Center to cut back on space for the municipal museum.

"We are paying high dollars for storage space. We want things collected for the entire City of Nome to be protected," Knodel said. "We will end up with things in storage vans. Let's look at what is reasonable, what the whole city can afford."

On the other hand, Councilman Jerald Brown is ready to throw open the door on a cooperative project, with Kawerak helping to defray operation and maintenance costs on a building that will hold thousands of square feet of artifacts display and library shelving brary shelving.

"I really like the idea of Kawerak in there," Brown said. "I don't see 4,000 square feet as sufficient for the needs of the culture center, but if Kawerak had $20 million, the City would be clamoring to get into their building."

Kawerak has been knocking at the door for several years, but the Museum Commission had not displayed an interest in exploring a combined museum, Kawerak Pres. Melanie Bahnke said at the work session. Kawerak has been ready to work with the City, throwing in human resources, capital investment and money to rent space, she said.

Kawerak has offered to provide land it has acquired and set aside on Seppala Drive for a Beringia Center of Culture and Science.

"We're not a competing interest," but able to complement the City's goals, Amy Russell, Beringia Center program director said. "We're a financially stable company, able to bring in resources."

Councilman Stan Andersen said he was on the fence.

"I'm inclined to incorporate Kawerak, but not if they are going to take that much space," he said.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz urged program leaders to pare down needs to fit within the proposed 17,000 sq. ft. "I don't want to raise the tax burden to meet the operation and maintenance expense on a larger building.

"Sometimes you shoot for pie in the sky, but you have to live within your means," he said.

Councilman Louis Green Sr. expressed concern on the cost of site preparation, should the City go ahead with the Thu Lan Munn site and need to tear down Munn's building.

Before the Council can take a definitive vote on whether the new museum will house the Carry M. McLain Museum, the Kegoayah Kozga Library and Kawerak's Beringia project, or any combination of the three, the City needs a legal opinion on possible conflicts of interest attached to Council members and City's administration, according to Mayor Denise Bahnke, who is an employee of Kawerak and potentially unable to cast any tie vote on the issue. Councilmember Jerald Brown works for Bering Straits Native Corp., parent of Kawerak, its nonprofit arm. BSNC has written a letter of support for Kawerak being included in the museum space. The City's attorney, Brooks Chandler, or perhaps an attorney independent of City retention will have to rule on who is eligible to vote free of conflict of interest under City ordinance and state laws on conflict or appearance of conflict in spending public funds.

The City has accepted federal and state money in the amount of $16.45 million with which to build the Richard Foster Building and set it aside in a special capital projects und budget. At the end of the June 27 work session, the Council had not settled on a site for building the facility to house a new museum and a new library to replace the current structure next door to the Board of Trade Saloon complex. The Museum and Library Commission, along with the Council, are still considering the corner of Federal Way and the old ball field property on Steadman St.

The Council gave City Manager Josie Bahnke and John K. Handeland of the museum commission direction to negotiate lower prices with three owners of property on the corner of Front Street and Federal Way—Thu Lan Munn, Leo B. Rasmussen family and Jim West Jr.

Hyer, architect, compared the museum project to building a threekegged stool: decrease or add space for one program and the whole structure have to be rebalanced.

At the end of the meeting, Beringia Center director Amy Russell nailed down the Council on an intent to consider a resolution at the July 9 regular meeting concerning whether museum plans would move ahead with Kawerak programs included in the design. That issue would be on the agenda, the administration said. Council meetings are open to the public.

DNR to miners: Avoid the pain of losing permits

By Sandra L. Medearis

Byron Redburn, state DNR's Nome offshore mining administrator, has issued a friendly warning to miners who owe the state money. The warning is a "heads up" for people who mined last season.

That warning is to pay up before the state finds the miner out of compliance on production royalties and Miner's License Tax, in which case a miner delinquent in payment would have his permit jerked immediately.

"This is not a new stipulation, and

"This is not a new stipulation, and has been in effect. It will be looked at. Please get ahead of this and take care of the business end of your license immediately," Redburn's letter said.

Miners must file the Miner's License Tax, administered by the Dept. of Revenue, before they can submit production royalties, administered by Dept. of Natural Resources. Production royalties are due on state property. The requirement applies to offshore mining tracts, Redburn said.

"It's just a part of good business, keeping records," Redburn said Friday. "If you are running your mining operation like a business, you shouldn't have too much trouble putting this together.

This is just a friendly little warning that I will making some calls on some miners," he said.

camp closure and West Beach structures removed by Oct. 15. Additionally, operators will provide an inventory of personal property left at the site over winter by Jan. 13.

Operators of the camp did not expect use and generator sounds to cause issues with neighbors, as at least a mile separates campers from neighbors living at the state trailers on Lindbloom Drive.

Limiting the speed allowed to 10 mph would also limit dust concerns.

The camp is designed to allow all the miners to work on equipment as conditions allow, with enough space between larger dredges to allow distance between larger camps to provide some privacy.

Operators would allow no permanent structures on the campground, but would allow commercial grade tents, yurts, frame tents, commercial campers and converted connexes.

crowave beam at an oncoming car, measures the time it takes to reflect back, and prints the MPH. If the vehicle is going faster than the legal limit, the number flashes for everyone to see. If vessels with AIS transceivers are going too fast, or heading the wrong direction, a third party can monitor the status. Page said that there are very few infractions because people know that they are being watched, and do not want a reputation of non-compliance. "We have 99.9 percent compliance on a voluntary measure," he said.

It is theoretically possible for coastal communities to have access to the AIS information of ships near their ports, but Page said that it is at the discretion of the stakeholders.

Installing an AIS receiver can cost anywhere from $100 to $100,000, Page said. The tracking radius is the variable. A $100 receiver can track about 15-to-30 miles, whereas more expensive models can track up to 220 miles offshore.

USGC Cmdr. Houck provided an update on the Bering Strait Port Access Route Study. Potential ship routing measures include establishing precautionary areas or Areas To Be Avoided, ATBA for short, and recommending routes to the vessels. Predictable traffic patterns, for example, northbound traffic on the east side of Saint Lawrence Island, southbound on the west, is the ultimate goal. "Predictability automatically lends itself to safety," Houck said. Using AIS tracking, the USCG can tailor personal directions to each vessel, depending on their cargo, and monitor the route that they take.

The health and safety of marine mammals is a prominent concern. "What affects the game will affect subsistence," Martin Robards of the Wildlife Conservation Society said. According to an Audubon Alaska Arctic Marine Synthesis, there are 4.5 million birds nesting on the Diomede Islands, and whales migrate along virtually the entire width of the strait. Both shipping routes and sea ice affect whale migration. Currently, there are routing measures, mandatory ship reporting, and speed restrictions in place to protect whales, according to Robards, but he would like to approach the upcoming issues proactively instead of waiting for a shock to persuade policychanging action.

The International Maritime Organization can designate Particularly Sensitive Sea Areas. A PSSA is "an area that needs special protection through action by IMO because of its significance for recognized ecological or socio-economic or scientific reasons and which may be vulnerable to damage by international maritime activities," according to the

and planning

Financial statements

IMO website. The U.S. currently has two PSSAs: Papahanaumokuakea Marine National Monument in Hawaii, and the sea around the Florida Keys. Though PSSA restrictions are not enforced by any legal entity, they are internationally recognized. Many who attended the workshop believe that the Bering Strait could qualify as a PSSA.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has a similar designation called a National Marine Sanctuary. Nine out of the fourteen present sanctuaries also have IMO designations, including PSSA. According to the NOAA presentation, NMS designation gives explicit authority to implement and enforce domestic regulations and recover damages when sanctuary resources are injured. It is also "a flag of special national significance." NOAA wildlife biologist Brad Hanson said.

Hanson advocated these mandatory measures, noting "You tend to get better compliance when somebody is there watching all the time." When it comes to voluntary measures, he said, "The literature suggests that they really don't work."

Oil spills, ship strikes, discharges from the ships, and vessel casualties are all issues, Hanson said. Rerouting traffic paths on the east coast to pass through an area with a lower density of baleen whales has resulted in an 80 percent drop in ship strikes. NOAA locates whales using acoustic mapping.

Victoria Gofman of the Bering Sea Sub Network is also working on a project to map sensitive areas. They are essentially subsistence density maps. BSSN surveys the hunters. During the interview, each hunter draws his or her subsistence hunting area. Using this information, BSSN compiles a map of the areas most densely utilized for subsistence. Between gathering information and producing the maps, Gofman said, "there's a bit of a lag." BSSN started in 2007, and has both Russian and Alaskan members.

The Eskimo Walrus Commission is concerned with how both shipping and receding sea ice conditions are affecting the walruses and subsistence. The commission works with 19 Alaska Native communities. Trolling vessels affect the food resources at the bottom of the sea, which are important to the communities, so restricting trolling north of the Bering Strait is important.

Multi-lateral cooperation with other Arctic countries is another challenge, since the water isn't claimed by any one government, and is used by all. "We haven't actually drawn a boundary," U.S. Dept. of State representative Ray Arnaudo said concerning US-Russian ownership of the continental shelf.

Mikhail Stishov of the World Wildlife Fund said that protected areas and buffer zones are still in the process of being established on the Russian side of the Bering Strait. Implementing and enforcing protective measures is still a few steps ahead.

The IMO is in the process of moving toward a mandatory "Polar Code." In 2002, non-mandatory guidelines for ships operating within Arctic ice-covered waters were set in motion, but currently there are no specific mandatory measures. Polar waters are controlled by three systems: the Baltic, Russian and Canadian systems. The Baltic System is the oldest, the Russian System relies on "icebreaker" escorts, and all systems have their own sets of paperwork.

The non-mandatory guidelines are not being used as a base for the code.

Going from voluntary to mandatory code is hard to do, the IMO representative said. The Polar Code attempts to address issues of both safety and environmental protection from a risk-based perspective. There are still many questions to be answered, including defining an acceptable level of risk. The target completion date is set for 2014.

Developing rules of the Northern Sea Route and Russian use of the Bering Strait was the topic of the final presentation. The Northern Sea Route has two main routes—"Northern" and "Coastal"—for draughts greater than 36 feet and less than 36 feet, respectively. These routes are calculated for maximum fuel efficiency and minimum days at sea.

Using diesel-electric and nuclear icebreakers, the Northern Sea Route could be used year-round. Russia has planned to build four icebreakers for an Arctic fleet, one of which has already been launched. To get an icebreaker escort, one must discuss contracts and fees with Russia.

The risks of the current system include negative impacts on phytoplankton and marine mammal migration, pollution from vessels, and a "foggy impact on fisheries." The presentation did not provide solutions for managing these risks. Combining US and Russian efforts seems to be the best hope. The Russian representative said that "we cannot stop the increased volume of traffic."

According to the presentation, the Bering Strait will likely see through traffic of seven to nine vessels each day, all year, by 2021. He suggested that the Arctic countries proceed to some kind of agreement before 2017.

Does the U.S. Supreme Court decision make you healthier?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Some people view health care as a fundamental human right. Others say health care is not a right, but a responsibility. On June 28th, the Supreme Court of the United States defined health care in the U.S. as neither a right, nor a responsibility, but as an investment.

According to the court's decision, Congress may use its taxing powers to encourage citizens to invest in health insurance, much the same way as raising taxes on cigarettes will theoretically encourage people to quit smoking.

Many people believe that those who have health insurance have better access to health care, which in turn leads to better health. But does having health insurance actually make people healthier?

Consider car insurance. Everyone would agree that having auto insurance is good because it makes repairing the vehicle a much easier process in the event of an unexpected accident. But car insurance does not inherently make a person a better driver.

In the same way, health insurance does not make us healthy. Health insurance is merely one way a group of people can share the cost of unexpected events so that when a serious injury or illness occurs no one person suffers financial ruin. Having health insurance for unexpected illness or injury is important. But whether or not a person has health insurance does not determine whether or not a person is actually healthy.

The provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA) do not inherently make Americans healthy. PPACA was designed to solidify the financial relationships between health care administrators and third party payers and lower the overall cost of health care by shaping the way Americans invest in the health care market.

PPACA includes the controversial and constitutionally challenged mandate that all Americans purchase insurance. The idea is that people will invest in some form of health insurance so that, in theory, when illness strikes the doctor's bill would already be covered.

The general belief is that the price of health care will decrease if everyone has health insurance. Proponents of PPACA argue that the price of medical care for insured patients has historically increased in order to cover the cost of providing care to uninsured patients who cannot pay at the time of treatment.

Chief Justice Roberts argues, however, that the lack of health insurance is not the primary driver of high medical care costs in the United States. In the Supreme Court's majority opinion, Chief Justice Roberts points out that many people in the U.S. do not eat a balanced diet. This group, says Roberts, makes up a larger percentage of the population than those without health insurance. "The failure of that group to have a healthy diet increases health care costs, to a greater extent than the failure of the uninsured to purchase insurance."

As an example, the Chief Justice points out the undeniable link between obesity and the rising cost of medical care. "Those increased costs are borne in part by other Americans who must pay more, just as the uninsured shift costs to the insured," says Roberts.

If the Chief Justice is correct, the combination of unhealthy lifestyles and increased insurance costs will increase the cost of healthcare for all working Americans. Under PPACA, otherwise healthy working Americans will be required to invest a growing percentage of their income with private health insurance companies to cover the increasing costs of illnesses that result from largely preventable lifestyle diseases.

mates that health insurance premiums will continue to increase by 5.7 percent a year over the next decade.

Under PPACA, insurance companies may not be able to deny coverage for preexisting conditions or overcharge their customers, but this does not mean the coverage will be affordable for everyone. According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, a self-employed couple with two children making $93,000 a year will pay an average of $17,094.00 in 2014 to a private health insurance company for basic coverage or pay a penalty tax to the IRS the following year.

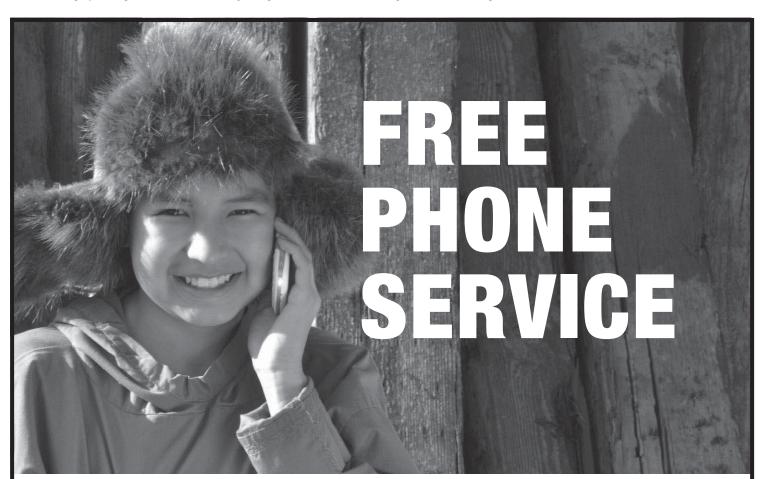

People who receive health insurance benefits through their employers will notice higher insurance deductions from their paychecks and an increase in their insurance deductibles (the amount that must be paid before insurance kicks in). More importantly, money that would otherwise provide an annual salary raise will likely go to pay health insurance benefits for the employees.

Even Alaska Native patients, who are largely insulated from the increased financial costs of health care, are expected to bear a greater personal cost because access to Indian Health care services will be shared with an expected increase in Medicaid patients, and perhaps newly insured non-Native patients, who are also seen at many IHS facilities.

The bottom line is that health care is expected to become more expensive, despite the provisions of PPACA, because being unhealthy is expensive and health insurance is not what makes a person healthy. Even the most comprehensive health insurance plan cannot compete with the simple, inexpensive, daily choices to eat right, exercise, maintain a healthy weight and stop smoking.

Furthermore, health insurance should never be thought of as health care. Health care is centered on a relationship between a patient and his or her provider. The relationship is ancient, sacred and results in better health. Health insurance is a business relationship centered on administrators and third-party payers where a patient's health, if it improves at all, is merely a by-product.

I think even the Chief Justice would agree that the decision to put on your tennis shoes this evening and go for a walk after eating a healthy dinner will do more to improve your health than any decision made by the Supreme Court, and that the relationship you maintain with a trusted physician means more to your wellbeing than the relationship you will soon be forming with an insurance company. You may be required to give the insurance company your money, but your health is not in their hands.

Community health aides quietly treat Alaskans for 40 years

By Amelia Cooper

The Community Health Aide training facility is built like a functional clinic. There are exam rooms full of medical equipment, and even a waiting room for mock patients. But, nobody is treated there. It is strictly for training Community Health Aides.

The Community Health Aide Program provides rural villages with an accessible health care option, and an opportunity for villagers to pursue health care careers. The training takes place in four month-long sessions, and can be completed as quickly as two years.

CHAs are "hired and trained from scratch to be health care providers,' Dan Thomas said.

Dan Thomas is one of the trainers at the Norton Sound Health Corporation CHAP Training Center. He has been involved with the CHAP off and on since 1977. The Nome facility has six trainers, all of whom are doctors and mid-level health pro-

CHAs are employees of the Norton Sound Health Clinic. They are paid from the moment they're hired, and they're hired before they're trained, Thomas said.

Many CHAs are in their early 20s, Thomas said, but there are older aides too. The only educational requirements are a high school diploma or GED, and a test to make sure hires can do math at an 8th grade level. "We're training new people all the time," Thomas said.

At the beginning of training, health aides are handed a Community Health Aides Manual. The CHAM is a medical encyclopedia with step-by-step instructions on how to diagnose and treat hundreds of illnesses. CHAs are thorough, Thomas said. "Doctors are trying to see people in 15 minutes; a health aide typically takes an hour, or more," he said.

The curriculum and manual were an early 1970s addition to the program. Health aide type jobs have existed since as early as 1830 when Russian doctors trained locals to take care of their own. The more recent model evolved from volunteer nurses in the 1950s, who made sure people took their TB medicines.

The CHAP developed in Alaska because access to health care is not as easy as on the road system. "People can't go see a doctor without having to take a plane ride," Thomas said. CHAP doesn't exist in any other state.

There are 60 funded health aide positions spread across 15 villages in Alaska. Currently, most of the positions are filled, which is uncommon. "PTSD is a big concern with health aides," Thomas said. "You have to take care of your own family and people you've known for a long time," he said, "it can be pretty traumatic." There is about a 20 percent turnover rate for CHAs.

CHAP training can double as college credit. Completing all four sessions is about half of an associate's degree, Thomas said. Some CHAs go on to be nurses, or physician assistants.

The Norton Sound Health Corporation CHAP just finished Session II training. There are nine sessions offered each year, with one week between. "It's pretty action-packed all year 'round," Thomas said. CHAP has been functioning for at least 40 years. In 1972, Thomas said, "I remember getting my thumb stitched up by a health aide with a doctor telling her how." There are also dental and behavioral health

"It's a tough job," Thomas said.

Obituary

Ida Ulugiina Weyauvanna was born on December 5, 1920, at Ikpik to George and Minnie Olanna. Ida married Charlie Weyauvanna on November 26, 1938, they had six children of their own and adopted one grandson, Bryan. Charlie and Ida resided in Brevig Mission until 1964, moved to Shishmaref and there they resided until Charlie's passing in 1972. Ida then moved to Nome with her youngest son Bryan in 1973, where she resided until her passing. She went to be with the Lord on June 13, 2012, while living at the Quyanna Care Center in Nome, where the workers enjoyed her company and personality.

While Charlie and Ida lived in Brevig Mission they were enjoyed by many, they left a respected impression. They lived a very active subsistence way of life, always fishing and hunting. Ida is remembered as one to carry a shotgun, to hunt ptarmigan. She was always doing something, tanning squirrel skins and making mukluk bottoms. Rita Olanna was one of the many she taught how to make crimped mukluk bottoms. As Charlie's evesight worsened, Ida was there to be his eyes. Charlie was an interpreter for the church, translating the pastor's messages in Inupiaq and Ida held the longest term as a Sunday school teacher.

While living in Brevig Mission, Ida was a respected health aide and midwife. In those days they would report patients to the Kotzebue hospital via radio because Nome did not have a hospital. She then continued providing excellent care to the community of Shishmaref until her retirement. Many mothers in Ida's care often spoke of the appreciation they have for her caring hands. She delivered and assisted with difficult pregnancies, ending in a healthy delivery. Some of the children have been named after her, in honor of their successful delivery

Ida was a devout Christian of the Lutheran Church, attending whenever physically possible. She appreciated the communions brought to her by the Lutheran pastors while still residing in her home. She constantly yearned to return to her home after moving into full time care. She listened to and watched many Lutheran conferences and gospel singspirations on her cassette recorder and TV. She stressed the importance of the Bible and prayer to her children and grandchildren, thankful for her strong faith she had in the Lord and all he has done. Ida was also a member of the church choir, and she always said, "Remember Jesus and always pray'

Ida whole-heartedly loved her grandchildren and great-grandchildren. She was blessed with 11 grandchildren and 28 great-grandchildren. Her home was always open to all family, relatives, and friends. Those who were in Nome for doctor's appointments, summer vacations, Iditarod basketball tournaments, or church conferences, whether visiting a few hours or staying for a time, were always welcomed with food or a place to sleep. All her grandchildren called her "mom". The love Ida extended to all included her nieces and nephews, many in the extended family also called her "Auntie Momma", and later she was referred to as "great-mom" by her greatgrandchildren.

Ida was a very skilled sewer, she made many mukluks, parkies, kuspuks, and hardsoles; providing warmth to her family and others. She was a very willing teacher to those learning to sew, many showed their work for her to critique and learn the correct method or style. While living in Nome she continued a subsistence lifestyle, gathering various greens, berries, eggs, and fish, and continually processed the meat and skins her son harvested. Ida enjoyed the times she and Bryan spent out in the countryside, traveling via car on the road system to gather food, fresh water, or just to get some fresh air. The grandchildren and great-grandchildren who had the opportunity to spend time will her all have fond fun memories of the great excursions out in the country. She greatly appreciated her son Bryan for taking her for a car ride out in the country every Mother's Day, until she was unable to do so.

Ida was a great fan of basketball, whether it was high school, city league, college, or professional. She and her friend Loretta Sinnok would sit for many hours watching the Iditarod basketball tournaments, enjoying each other's company as they also did visiting in her home. She would gladly hear all the high school updates, discussing statistics over the phone, and watching games on TV intently with her grandsons and great grandsons.

Ida is survived by her children Clara and Shelton Kokeok, Susie and Ben Kokeok, Bryan Weyauvanna (Charlie, MacKenzie, Hailey). Grandkids: Warren and Bessi Sinnok (Ralph "Skip", Victoria "Sweety", Esau, Fred) Frieda Sinnok and Warren Ningeulook (Ralph, Raymond, Frank) John and Kate Kokeok (Edward, Carter, Elizabeth), Joshua Kokeok, Nancy Kokeok and Robbie Ningeulook (Austin, Corey, Edgar, Sarah, Sonja, Hunter), Harry Kokeok and Lori Hadley (Morgan), Wilsa Kokeok and Ralph Sinnok (Bradley, Michael, Carl, Dawn), Annie and Jason Weyiouanna (Luke), Norman "Mickey" Kokeok and Vanessa Eningowuk (Kaden). Sister-in-law: Edith Olanna.

Ida is preceded in death by her parents George & Minnie Olanna. Brothers: Alfred and Irene Olanna, Arnold and Katherine Olanna, Harry and Faye Olanna, Elliot and Emma Olanna, Washington and first wife Frieda Olanna, Frank Olanna. Sisters: Marie and Jack Ningeulook, Helen and Verne Eutuk. Children: Al Jacob, Jacob, Warren and Edna Weyauvanna. Grandchildren: Alfred Charlie Kokeok and Norman Charlie

Saying It Sincerely

A Fortnight for Freedom By Father Ross Tozzi, St. Joe's Catholic Church

Each 4th of July, the people of the nation look back to the founding of the nation and celebrate Independence Day. The wisdom from the Dec-Independence acknowledges that God the Creator has given every human the Rights to "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." It is the duty of our government to protect those rights. If the government does not respect our dignity and our freedom, then the governed must take a stand for their God given rights. Health care reform in our nation while certainly needed and well intentioned, threatens our freedom. This is why Catholics through the nation have undertaken a campaign of prayer and education under the title of a Fortnight for Freedom..

Almighty God, Father of all nations,

For freedom you have set us free in Christ Jesus (Gal 5:1)

We praise and bless you for the gift of religious liberty,

The foundation of human rights, justice and the common good.

Grant to our leaders the wisdom to protect and promote our liberties;

By your grace may we have the courage to defend them,

Dear Wilfred, Harry, & Kelik,

I would like to take this opportunity

For ourselves and for all those who live in this blessed land.

The sacredness of human life calls for us to care for the sick with dignity and respect. Jesus did that time and time again through the healing of the sick. Take for example the women who suffered for 12 years and exhausted all of her funds seeking a medical cure (Mark 5:25-34). The respect and dignity Jesus had for the woman who but touched his clothes recognized her faith. What if the women had not run into Jesus? Would there have been any help from the government of that time to assist her? Probably not.

The fundamental sacredness of human life calls us to work for laws that help people in their weakness and sickness. The Catholic Church in the United States has been calling for the government to do more to help people with respect to health care since 1919. One might then ask, so what is all of the fuss about health care reform in the United States? Shouldn't we all be in support of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA)? Man made laws are not always fair and just.

Many people anxiously awaited the Supreme Court's decision this past Thursday over health care in our Nation. Some cheered the decision. Others vowed to repeal it at the first chance. A church spokesman had this to say, "The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops has not joined in efforts to repeal the law in its entirety, and we do not do so today . . . The decision of the Supreme Court neither diminishes the moral imperative to ensure decent health care for all, nor eliminates the need to correct (the law's) fundamental flaws."

GONE FISHING— With pink salmon having arrived in regional waters, Nome residents and visitors hit the Nome River mouth on Sunday, July 1, sinking their hooks in the river for a fresh harvest of salmon.

The spokesmen went onto make three points:

"First, ACA allows use of federal funds to pay for elective abortions and for plans that cover such abortions, contradicting longstanding federal policy." Beyond longstanding federal policy, God has given every human the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Our founding fathers acknowledged that these Rights are "unalienable" as they come from God alone. As a nation, we have certainly drifted far and wide from the principles of our Declaration of Independence.

'Second, the Act fails to include necessary language to provide essential conscience protection, both within and beyond the abortion context." According to the Bill of Rights, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." With the silence of the law to provide for religious liberty, the Health and Human Services Administration has run roughshod over the Bill of Rights and mandated religious employers to violate deeply held religious beliefs to cover sterilization and contraception, including abortifacient drugs. Let us recall the words of Jesus in healing the woman who but touched his clothes. "Daughter, your faith has saved you. Go in peace and be cured of your affliction" (Mark 5:34). Jesus respected the woman's faith and recognized it as essential to her cure. Federal laws and mandates need to respect the religious liberty of our faith consistent with the Bill of Rights.

"Third, ACA fails to treat immigrant workers and their families fairly. ACA leaves them worse off by not allowing them to purchase health coverage in the new exchanges created under the law, even if they use their own money. This undermines the Act's stated goal of promoting access to basic life-affirming health care for everyone, especially for those most in need.'

One case has been settled in the Supreme Court but there are many other legal challenges still to be addressed. The cases in the courts and the debate rages on. Certainly many would disagree with a Catholic understanding of what is most important. However, if our government does not exercise the wisdom to protect and promote the liberties that our Creator has endowed us with, can we truly celebrate our independence?

Polar bear sighted near Cape Nome

By Diana Haecker

Reports reached Nome that a polar bear was seen at the beach between Hastings and Cape Nome in the afternoon of Wednesday, June 27.

When it saw people it dashed into the ocean and swam toward Cape

According to Jack Omelak with the Alaska Nanuuq Commission, the commission has heard several reports that indeed a polar bear was sighted walking along the beach near Cape Nome. The Alaska Nanuuq Commission is co-managing polar bears with the federal US Fish and Wildlife Service. Omelak said that the commission has relied on the knowledge and efforts of local people to safely deter polar bears from their villages, or have relied on the Alaska State Troopers -when available- or the USFWS Enforcement Officer based in Nome.

The Nanuuq Commission has no formal deterrence or interaction plan in place, but is working on developing a long-term strategy dealing with human-polar bear encounters. "This effort is crucial, as the probability for increased interactions is inevitable with the impending loss of polar bear habitat and sea ice, and our phased implementation of a quota for the Chukchi population," Omelak wrote.

"This plan is part of a five-year project which seeks to identify human and polar bear interactions within the villages the ANC represents and to identify and assess previous and current polar bear deterrence and interaction plans, and lastly, develop and implement polar bear deterrence and interaction plans within the villages we represent," Omelak wrote.

The Alaska Nanuuq Commission and several of its partners, the USFWS, World Wildlife Fund and the Defenders of Wildlife, are putting together a two day workshop in December of 2012 to introduce members of the region to the concepts and issues regarding humans and polar bears.

NUGGETS - Colorado visitor Joe Fortunato shows the gold nuggets he found at Krutzsch's gold camp. According to Augie Krutzsch, the smaller nuggets weigh an ounce, the bigger nugget weighs 4.5 ounces.

Colorado man strikes it rich during vacation in Nome

By Diana Haecker

With a name like Fortunato, fortune did smile on Joe Fortunato, a 65-year old tourist from Westminister, Colorado doing some prospecting at Betty Krutzsch's AKau Gold and Resort near Anvil Creek. On day 11 of his Nome vacation at the gold resort, Fortunato ran his metal detector over an area that had shown some color before and then struck it rich. "You always hear about these kind of stories, but you don't think it could happen to you," Joe Fortunato said. It did. Fortunato said his metal detector started sounding the alarm and he started digging a few inches through the dirt before he found a pigeon-size gold nugget. "When I first saw it, I didn't think it was a nugget," Fortunato said. "I thought it was a rock covered with dirt." Fortunato said that a friend had been in the same area the day before and found some gold. He as well has been running his metal detector over it, but he said, he had not paid close enough attention to the task. "I'd gone right past them," he said. But on Tuesday, June 26 Fortunato had his mind on the game. Holding the heavy dirtcovered nugget in hand, the gold shone through and Fortunato realized what he's found. Giddy with excitement, he kept digging and found a second gold nugget about the same size. And then the metal detector went off again. Fortunato dug yet deeper into the earth and a few feet into the ground, he found a hunk of a gold nugget, weighing in at about four and a half ounces.

The nuggets are his to keep, says Augie Krutzsch who runs the gold resort with his mother Betty Krutzsch. The Krutzsch's have operated their mine for years, but this year, they have opened their claim to visiting prospectors. The Krutzsch's have built guest cabins and offer visitors the chance to try their luck prospecting with metal detectors as well as high-banking with sluicecoming to Alaska to prospect all his life. He said, this was his first trip to Nome and he'll likely be coming back, next time with his wife. "I will treasure this forever," he said. At 65, he is still working at his business manufacturing machine parts for spray-painting equipment and computers. He said the three nuggets would be his forever. "No way, I'm gonna sell them. They'll be in a glass case on top of my mantelpiece for me to look at," he said with a big

Council opens Foster Building to Kawerak museum plans

By Sandra L. Medearis

It is decided and all over but the shouting: Nome's new Carrie M. McLain museum plans will include Kawerak's Beringia Museum of Culture and Science. Kawerak needs museum quality space of about 3,500 sq. ft. for display, storage and office space.

The Nome Common Council Monday evening voted 4-2 on a resolution to allow Kawerak, Inc. to participate in planning and using space in the Richard Foster Building.

Kawerak has offered money for maintenance and operation as well as lease income.

Practical realization of the resolution depends on the City of Nome and Kawerak Inc. arriving at a memorandum of understanding establishing a management and operation plan for the facility.

The vote could have hung up on possible conflicts of interest held by Councilman Jerald Brown and Mayor Denise Michels that would have prevented their voting. Kawerak is a non-profit arm of Bering Straits Native Corp. Brown holds a management position with BSNC. The mayor, who would vote if there were a 3-3 tie, holds a management position with Kawerak, Inc. However, the City's attorney, Brooks Chandler, when City manager Josie Bahnke asked him for an opinion, said that neither had a conflict of interest obstructing their votes on the issue. As it occurred,

Almost every seat was taken in the Council Chambers at Nome City Hall, with about a dozen citizens taking the podium to comment for or against the measure. Council members Louis Green Sr., Stan Andersen, Randy Pomeranz and Jerald Brown cast yes votes with Mary Knodel and Councilwoman Josie Stiles saying Kawerak's president, Melanie Bahnke, led off, reiterating what the City of Nome would gain in allowing Kawerak to rent 3,500 sq. feet in the new building—a partnership with a substantial organization, help with maintenance and operation costs and build on Richard Foster's legacy of cooperation.

Amy Russell, director of BMCS, added that combining with the City's museum would foster better care of cultural resources than the City museum could provide, including resources that were confidential in partures.

Others spoke

"I think all cultures were planned to be on display," Councilwoman Mary Knodel said. The project was $2 million short of the need for including the library, with the City depending on a library grant.

"I am opposed to giving up any space," Knodel said. Studies had showed the amount of space needed for space for storage and displays, then that space was cut for the library. Not only would inclusion of Kawerak cut the museum space again, but it could make space for a larger facility unaffordable on Front Street.

"If we have to pay higher for land on Front Street, then we will have to move it off Front Street," Knodel said Brown, asking for a ruling on his possible conflict of interest, and receiving the go-ahead from the mayor, said he favored the combining of the two museums.

ing of the two museums.

"My personal opinion is we need to cooperate, we need to work together, we need to be able to have the museums under one roof," he said.

Should the Council and all concerned not be able to agree, Nikolai Ivanoff had a dream, he said, complete with a hand-drawn map. Ivanoff proposed the two museums exist separately, but connected, on the same ground, sharing a service module for heat and power.

Barb Amarok said she did not represent any group, but it was "just and right for the [combined] museum to represent the culture of people who live here."

The City has received state funding of $2 million in 2010 and $14 million in 2011—$16 million for the proposed Richard Foster Building to house the museum. Design work has since included the library within the square footage. Kawerak wishes to lease 3,500 sq. ft. for display, storage and office space. The City will pursue library construction funds for an additional $2 million through a state grant process, according to Josie Bahnke, city manager. Currently, planners are looking at constructing a 16,000 – 17,000-sq. ft. facility at the priority site at the corner of Front Street and Federal Way.

Putting both museums under one roof would go far in healing a divide between Native and nonnative groups, Sue Steinacher said, and also "draw more local residents and visitors into both organizations' spaces.

Leasing to Kawerak for a regional museum would cut out needed space for the City's museum. He has had reservations about adding another partner to the Richard Foster Building project, Charlie Lean, member of the Museum and Library Commission, said.

"One of the selling points of this grant was a place to conserve preserve take care of the city's archive resources. It's not at cross purposes to add a greater collection. It seems somewhat disrespectful after so many people have worked hard to get a grant, for people to say 'your museum is too damn big anyway.' The situation is that the City has a

Summer is here when the barges stacked sky-high with containers arrive, laden with building and construction materials. Heavy equipment rolling off those barges is a sure sign that construction is happening. Flag men and women stand out in the safety vests in town as well as on the outlying roads leading both to Teller and Council. The Alaska

Dept. of Transportation has a long list of new construction as well as repairs and maintenance projects scheduled for this summer.

One of the biggest projects to begin this summer is the Snake River Bridge replacement. The $ 8.5 million contract was awarded on July 5 to Pro-West Contractors. The existing bridge north of the power plant will be replaced by a new bridge that is designed to cross the Snake River 300 feet southeast of the Center Creek Road and connect to Jafet Drive.

The project is to be completed by October 1, 2013. Work is slated to start this summer. Kinnan Engineering, an Oregon drilling company, is currently drilling a new 24-foot diameter water and sewer line from the power plant underneath the Snake River to Belmont Point to reroute the utilities from the old bridge to the new location.

The Nome-Council Highway has numerous sections where repairs are done. Just out of town, past the Beam Road intersection, contractor Ridge Contracting is performing a few small shoulder repairs, but further down the road, between mile 16 and

Letters

Dear Editor:

The two Native Villages of Tuntutluliak and Akiak are within their rights to catch their traditional foods, which is something they have done for thousands of years. The state is arresting Alaska Natives not because they are wrong, but to discourage us Natives from taking what is our inherent rights that were never ceded nor relinquished.

Northwest Ordinance of 1787

(1Stat.50) Article 3 assured that "The utmost good faith shall always be observed towards the Indians; their lands and property shall never be taken without their consent; and, in their property, rights and liberty, they shall never be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity, shall from time to time be made for preventing wrongs being done to them, and for preserving peace and friendship with them."

Indian Tribal Justice Act

US Code: Title 25, Chapter 38, § 3601. The Congress finds and declares that (in part):

(1) there is a government-to-government relationship between the United States and each Indian tribe;

(2) the United States has a trust responsibility to each tribal government that includes the protection of the sovereignty of each tribal gov-

(3) Congress, through statutes, treaties, and the exercise of administrative authorities, has recognized the self-determination, self-reliance, and inherent sovereignty of Indian tribes;

Secretary of State John Quincy Adams stated.

"The United States asserted that the Native Nations essentially possess the title and dominion with full sovereignty and independence as any European nation under the law of Nations." This placed the sovereignty of the Alaska Nations on equal footing as any European Nation.

Therefore, Alaska Native Nations have "Title." The State of Alaska sued the Federal Government in 1975 since they claimed to have quit claim deed. The Supreme Court ruling was quit claim does not transfer title. The State of Alaska sued again around 2000. The suit was called "Original Action 128." Kuiu's filed a brief called "Act of State" with the Supreme Court putting them on notice that it would be conflict of interest to hear Original Action 128.

Sincerely, George S. James, Jr. Ketchikan, AK 99901

No excuse - recuse

Elected officials need to be aware that they have an obligation to refrain from voting on actions that would enhance their own economic interests. This also includes the financial interests of their employers. Elected officials should not be feathering their own nests or that of the company that signs their paychecks.

The appearance of impropriety is overwhelming in some cases. Its frequency numbs many Nomeites who have come to accept this as normal. "Well, this is Nome," they say as they as they shrug their shoulders. The feeling of helplessness is pervasive. However it is possible to correct the situation if the public would attend meetings and call the officials into question. The elected bodies can also self-police themselves by asking if there is a need to recuse before every vote.

Let's encourage elected officials to be above reproach by demanding special self interest actions be held to the scrutiny of recusal.

Foster's Report

Representative Neal Foster Alaska State Legislature House District 39

Hello everyone. I hope you are having a great summer. It's nice to see everyone getting out into the country, and I'm looking forward to the berries coming soon. The following are a few items that usually come up in discussion as I've visited with folks this summer.

Redistricting: As things stand the Amended Proclamation Plan has been given preclearance by the Department of Justice. The Division of Elections has moved forward with implementation of that plan in preparation of the August Primary. There was a lawsuit (dismissed) to stop the DOE from implementing that plan. The argument was that if they were allowed to implement that plan they would use it regardless of approval from DOJ. The bottom line on this is that Federal trumps State. If the DOJ said no to the State's election map then the State could not run under that map. That case has been dismissed, as has the district court request before a three-judge panel to look at the assertions of the plaintiffs. The potential for more lawsuits is still there. What would another lawsuit mean? In my view it is unlikely that a new map could be drawn in time for a primary election even if the date was moved back. Redistricting is a net zero game and any map that makes some groups happy is going to anger others. This would mean any new map would start the litigation process all over again. If a new map could clear the Supreme Court it would still have to go to the DOJ for 60-days for review and preclearance. That means if you could draw a map and get it through the courts in a month (unlikely) you still wouldn't know if that map was legal until the end of October. This leaves us with two options to consider. The first is we could run under what's been called the Benchmark Plan (existing districts). The second is we could run under the Amended Proclamation Plan that already has DOJ preclearance. The main obstacle for the Benchmark Plan is that it will be subject to the litigation process, and there are several groups with legitimate claims. For all the constitutional problems with the plans before us a Benchmark Plan would violate the most basic tenant of the constitution, which is "one man, one vote". There are many areas that have grown in population. A benchmark plan would deny them their most basic right of equal representation. Therefore I think it is most likely that we will run under the Amended Proclamation Plan since it has been approved by both the Supreme Court and the Department of Justice.

Coastal Zone Management: Proposition 2 will be on this year's primary ballot. It restores the Alaska Coastal zone Management Program. This program lapsed last year after sides were unable to reach consensus over the direction of the program. Each side in this battle has been described in many ways particularly over the issue of development. Both sides claim that their stance is better for development. Anti-ACMP argues that this program is an extra hoop to jump through that makes development more burdensome. Pro-ACMP argues that the program gives the State of Alaska dominance over the Federal EPA in the permitting process and is therefore better for development. The funny thing about this is that they are both right. ACMP will have requirements that prospective developers will have to follow. But permitting will be in the hands of Alaska's Department of Environmental Conservation. Without the State's Coastal Zone Program the Federal EPA will be in the driver's seat, and they have not always fully understood Alaska's unique conditions. If you would like more information on this program prior to casting your ballot please free to contact my office.

Supreme Court: A recent ruling in the case of Secretary of the Interior v. Ramah Navajo Chapter held that the Government must pay each Tribe's contract support costs in full. During Fiscal Years 1994 through 2001 it was found that insufficient funding had been provided by Congress, and in order to deal with that short fall the Department of the Interior paid tribes on a pro rata basis across the board. This was in violation of The Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act. That act covered multiple areas of service contracting such as health, transportation, public safety etc. The Act requires the Secretary to contract and pay the full amount of contract support costs. This ruling should prove to be a healthy financial shot in the arm for Alaska tribes as well as those in the lower 48. The court has made it clear that the US government must honor agreements made with the tribes and puts the onus on Congress and the Administration to pay contracts now in the budget or later in a The ruling can be read in full here http://www.supremecourt.gov/opinions/11pdf/11-551.pdf

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In an attempt to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

However, they did see their first sign of GOLD. It was $18 per ounce back

Photo by Wilfred McDaniel from the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum Archives JULY 15, 1900 - "It is just a month today since we landed and we are running now in good shape. We have everything in good running order. Can see lots of gold in the boxes."

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget newspaper, Wilfred and brother Ed spent a lot of time perfecting the operation of their water pumps. Wilfred suffered from severe indigestion from heaven knows what and with no Tums around in 1900.

night shift and Ed take the day run. Our ground prospects fine and we are happy about all this gold. We hired two men today at six dollars per day.

July 16, 1900

I worked in the night shift all night. Went to bed at 8 this morning and got up at 5:30P p.m. The sun rose at 2:30 a.m. The moon staid in the same position all night long. About half way up above the horizon in the S.E. Apparently it did not move at all. Struck 15¢ a pan on our ground today.

July 17, 1900

Had to stop pumping at 10:15 p.m. as the water gave out. Put the men at cleaning bedrock. Started the engine at 2:30 a.m. and sluiced until 6 o' clock. Went to bed at 0 a.m., and slept till 1 p.m. Cleaned up the boxes and got one pound of amalgam. Had to take the suction pipe off and clean out the strainer and tighten the joints. Heard that the government is going to send five transports to take our destitute men from here. Had to lay off the night shift at 10:30 p.m. as the suction pipe was stopped up. We worked until midnight on the suction pipe.

Got up at 7 a.m. and started the diggings at 8:30. Weather is cloudy but A steamer loaded with Cheechalkers came in this morning. I have had to turn my socks over as I have worn out the heels in all of them. I now wear the heel on top and am all right for a while. Our clean up weighed 5 oz. value $90. We removed the foot valve from the suction pipe and we are now getting more water. Dig a good day's work today. Got letters from home. One letter of June 16 was 33 days on the trip to Nome.

July 19, 1900

Wrote a letter home this morning and sent it downtown. We sluiced until 12:30 p.m. when our pump began bucking. Worked on the pipe all afternoon. Got fine prospects in the mine. The sea is very rough and the breakers damage our suction pipe. The dynamo got a hot box. I worked on it until 10 p.m.

July 20, 1900

Started our pump this morning and she gave us as much trouble as ever. Went to work at 9 a.m. lagging the drive pulley. Got through at 11:30 and we now get enough water. Sluiced all afternoon. We will put on 2 men tonight. I slept all afternoon, as I must be up all night. It is very windy today and the sea is very rough. Heard that the Bear took out 250 strapped men to Seattle. The people are leaving as fast as they can get money enough to get out on.

July 21, 1900

I went to bed at 7:30 a.m. and slept till 2 p.m. Ed moved the sluice boxes and we will start another fit tonight. Our pump is lots of trouble. I think we have mastered it though. Opened it this afternoon and took out some sticks, a chunk of wood and some seaweed. We now get a fine flow of water. It is now midnight and I am writing this by the light of the rising sun. One star is visible tonight, the first I have seen for two months. To be continued in the next Nome Nugget.

READY, SET, GO! - Twenty-four Anvil Mountain Run competitors took off on the 12.5-mile run from Nome's Front Street to the top of Anvil Mountain and back.

Anvil Mountain Run continues Nome's Fourth of July tradition

By Stephen Palmatier

What do you do on the Fourth of July? Go to a parade? Perhaps watch some fireworks? Well, for the 35th year, 24 people decided to start their holiday off with a run on a cold, foggy Fourth of July morning. And not just any run, the Anvil Mountain Run, a 12.5 mile run, up the mountain that gives runners a test both physically and mentally.

Being the second oldest race in Alaska, the Anvil Mountain Run has a lot of tradition and history and is one race that people want to see if they can accomplish.

"I had heard about this race before and was intrigued by the challenge knowing that it would be the farthest I have ever run in my life," said Ian Coglan, who finished 12th in the Many runners like Coglan participated in the race for the first time while some had experienced the challenge before.

The winner of this year's run was 24-year-old Levi Daugherty, who completed the race in a blazing time of 1 hour, 20 minutes and 30 seconds. Daugherty, who previously won the Nome Gold Dust Dash in June during the Midnight Sun Festival had nothing but a wonderful experience with the race.

"It was awesome," said Daugherty. "It was really neat running on the mountain," said Daugherty.

Finishing in second place was 41year-old Nils Hahn with a time of 1 hour, 20 minutes and 57 seconds, just 27 seconds behind Daugherty. In third place was 40-year-old Ted Moore, who finished with a time of 1 hour, 21 minutes and 2 seconds. Rounding out the top 5 were 57- and 56-year-olds Greg Finstad and Gary Knuepfer.

This year's race also was not just a test of running for 12 miles, but rather mother nature had something to add to make it all the more interesting and challenging. The fog, which was perched on the entire mountain was as dense and thick as anything one could imagine, being able to see only 10 yards roughly in front of you.

"In my mind's eye, this is the worst fog we have ever had," said Leo Rasmussen, the coordinator of the Anvil Mountain Run. "I've never seen fog that thick on top of all four checkpoints," said Rasmussen.

The fog made the challenge that much greater for the runners, in particular coming down the face of the mountain at a rapid speed where they could not see where they were going. "It made it so much harder," said

Callie Kettner, who finished 9th in the race. "I got lost during the race and had no idea where I was going," said Kettner.

The first woman to finish the race was Naomi O'Neal, who finished in 8th place, while one of the racers did not finish the race because they missed the mountain road during the run. Also of note, 56-year-old David Olson, who finished in 19th place, completed his 28th consecutive Anvil Mountain Run.

The race, even with its excruciating challenges at times is something that people want to take part in every year and it looks to be going strong for years to come.

We have always started the Fourth of July off with this, and it gets people's blood flowing for the day," said Rasmussen.

NJUS Water & Sewer Construction Project Update – July 2012

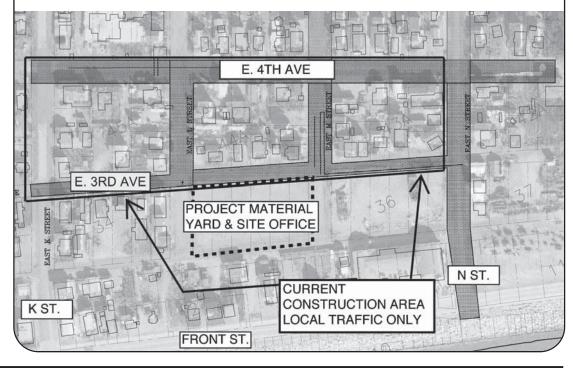

Construction is continuing to replace aging water and sewer mains and services in East Nome.

The project office and material storage yard are located on Block 35, between L & M Streets and 1st & 3rd Avenue (Thanks to Nome Eskimo Community for supporting this project by allowing use of their property). For safety reasons, please do not walk or drive through this area. Access is restricted to authorized construction personnel only.

The project area is shown on the map below. This area is closed to through-traffic. Access will be maintained for LOCAL TRAFFIC ONLY. Excavation crews will be continuing work at various locations within the project area. Effected homes have been connected to temporary water and sewer service.

For the next several weeks, excavation will proceed on 3rd & 4th Avenue toward N Street, and on L Street and M Street. As we complete work at the intersection of 3rd Ave & K Street, we will re-open K Street to regular traffic. By mid-July, we expect to begin excavating in N Street, working from Front Street northward. At that time, N Street will be restricted to local traffic only.

We appreciate the cooperation we have received from local residents. If you have any questions or concerns, please call our Project Superintendent, Jeff Juelson, at 443-6326.

Change of Teller reindeer herd management questioned

By Amelia Cooper

In April, the Kawerak Reindeer Herders Association and the Bureau of Indian Affairs convened to reappoint the management of the Teller reindeer herd from Julia Lee to Tom Gray, and many of the people of Teller are wondering why they've been left out of the loop. "Why were we not notified that the management of the Teller reindeer herd was going to someone outside of Teller?" Norbert Kakaruk of Teller asked in a June 14 letter to the editor.

It seems the BIA has been out of the loop as well. According to BIA Alaska Regional Office Natural Resources Manager Keith Kahken, the BIA hasn't received a tally on sales in the past three years. He doesn't even know how many reindeer are in the herd.

"The bureau requires numbers," Kahklen said. "There are reports that have to be filed," and the previous manager wasn't responding to requests for those reports, he said.

"We needed to do something to make sure that the herd was being taken care of," Kahlken said.

James Pushruck is glad that somebody has finally taken control of the herd. "The way things were going, we had people from Brevig, Teller, and Nome," he said, "people were just constantly butchering reindeer."

There are 10 inherited owners of the Teller herd. They are all descendents of the previous owner, John Kakaruk. "We contacted those owners and let them know what we're going to do," Kahklen said. "They don't know what's been sold in the past few years," he said, "they don't know what's been going on."

Many of the herd owners don't live in Alaska, according to Kahklen. "Some of them never been to Teller in their life," Teller resident Joe Garnie said.

not plan to relocate the reindeer. In fact, they do not plan to make any changes other than the new appointment, which isn't permanent, Kahklen said. "It's successful where it is," he said. "It's one of the most, if not the most, successful herd." According to Greg Finstad, the Teller reindeer herd is the largest herd on the Seward Peninsula. Finstad is a Reindeer Research Biologist and

"We needed to do something to make sure that the herd was being taken care of.

"Finding out about something like this by reading it in the paper is an insult," Garnie wrote in a June 7 letter to the editor. The voice of Teller was not represented in making the decision to reappoint the herd. Pushruck argued that the Teller Traditional Council has never had a say in how the reindeer were managed.

Kahklen said that the BIA does head of the Reindeer Research Program at UAF.

The Reindeer Research Program works closely with Alaskan reindeer herds and herders to see that the reindeer are healthy and productive. Money generated from reindeer sales benefits the community. There is incredible value in the antler velvet and meat production of such a large herd, Finstad said, but the Teller herd hasn't been harvested to its economic potential.

Garnie said that the price of reindeer has been too high in recent years. "An animal that is homegrown and grazes for free is more expensive than beef or poultry or pork that has been imported," he said. 'This is wrong.'

"The management has been unstable," Finstad said. One constant that has allowed the herd to thrive is local initiative, he said. Garnie attributes the herd's success to Teller locals as well. "It is because Teller people take care of the reindeer today as we have done for more than 100 years," Garnie wrote. "Occasional caribou have wandered into the reindeer herd," Kakaruk wrote, "but since the herders were always on their toes, they got rid of the cari-

"You gotta be with the reindeer," Garnie said, especially during calving season in the spring.

Whether the manager is from Teller or White Mountain is insignificant to reindeer research. "We will work with whoever the manager is to increase production," Finstad said. Though, Finstad added, "Local range resources should be used to improve quality of life for local communities." The people of Teller benefit from the herd, Kahlken said. "We'd like to see that continue."

Pushruck doesn't mind that the new manager isn't from Teller. "People didn't respect the last manager," he said. "What they need is some sort of authority here.'

Rose Fosdick of the RHA declined to comment until she had an opportunity to speak with the Teller community.

"Everything's at a stalemate," Garnie said. Usually by this time of year, the Teller reindeer have been rounded up and de-antlered, but Garnie said that this July the reindeer still haven't been tended to.

The last couple of years have seen meager round-ups, according to Pushruck. "Last year they rounded up about 400," he said. "Not a very good job of corralling them and tagging them.'

Right now the issue is "up in the air," Pushruck said. The BIA is tentatively planning to meet with the community, Kahlken said. "We're going to try to meet in Teller," he said, but they haven't yet set a time to meet. The RHA sent a letter to the community, but nobody has responded, they said. "I'm just too disgusted to deal with it," Garnie said.

Garnie and Kakaruk both think that the people of Teller should have a say in what is best for their community. "We need to start over with Teller people at the table," Garnie wrote.

"We took care of them, we did our job," Garnie said, "Give us a

Salmon: Superfood of the sea

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Salmon are arriving back into the region. Fish racks and smoke houses are adding their scents to the welcome aromas of summer, and freezers in western Alaska will soon be restocked with many varieties of salmon, arguably the world's healthiest meat.

Though it is easy for people in Alaska to take the presence of wild salmon in the summer for granted, the American Heart Association and the American Diabetes Association would say we are fortunate to have access such to healthy food. These organizations recommend fatty fish like salmon for the prevention of serious disease and the promotion of overall

Wild salmon provides an excellent source of protein. Salmon contains nearly the same amount of protein per serving as red meats with only half the amount of total fat and only a quarter of the amount of heart clogging saturated fats.

Salmon provides a natural source of healthy polyunsaturated fats called omega-3 fatty acids. Two forms of omega-3 fatty acids are found in salmon: docosashexaenoic acid (DHA) and eicosapentaenoic acid (EPA). Research shows that consumption of DHA and EPA reduces the risk of heart attack, heart arrhythmias and stroke.

In Northwestern Alaska, the Genetics of Coronary Artery Disease in Alaska Natives (GOCODAN) has salmon, which are high in omega-3 fatty acids, are associated with lower triglycerides and LDL (bad cholesterol) and a higher HDL (good cholesterol).

Salmon may also help people with autoimmune diseases. The omega-3 fatty acids found in salmon are known to have anti-inflammatory effects that reduce symptoms and need for extra medication in people with rheumatoid arthritis, ulcerative colitis, psoriasis, Crohn's disease, and lupus erythematosus.

In recent years, salmon has been highlighted as an important source of vitamin D3. People who live in the far north are at risk of vitamin D deficiency cause dark winters and poor UVB radiation penetration of sunlight at northern latitudes inhibits the synthesis of vitamin D in the skin. Vitamin D deficiency has been associated with an increased risk for heart disease, osteoporosis, type I diabetes mellitus, certain cancers, multiple sclerosis, rheumatoid arthritis, and susceptibility to infectious disease.

Regular consumption of salmon can prevent vitamin D deficiency. One 3.5 oz serving of salmon contains between 600-1000 units of vitamin D3. Experts recommend 400-1000 units of vitamin D3 daily for children over age 1, and 800-1000 units of vitamin D3 daily from all sources for otherwise healthy adults. Many doctors in Alaska recommend higher doses for people with vitamin D deficiency.

Wild salmon also provides essential minerals like selenium and vitamin E, antioxidants that help detoxify the body of waste products and improve the immune system, and may also protect against prostate

Some people are wary of possible toxins found in salmon. Various studies show that salmon meat contains low levels of mercury and polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) that once ingested can remain in the body for years. This concerns some nutritionists who discourage the consumption of fatty fish, especially in pregnant women and young children. However, the extent to which these toxins cause disease in people who eat salmon regularly is unknown, and all experts agree that population subgroups, like rural Alaskans, who once relied exclusively on a salmonrich diet suffer negative consequences in overall nutrition if they decrease their intake of marine foods.

Therefore, the American Heart Association states that the risk of not eating salmon far outweighs any risk from accumulating toxins from eating fish. The Food and Drug Administration currently recommends limiting salmon consumption to 12 ounces (3-4 servings) of fish weekly for pregnant women and children. Generally, adults may safely consume 14 ounces or more of salmon weekly.

The far greater risk to Alaskans is not potential toxins in fish but the ever looming potential for a loss of healthy salmon runs.

Studies of the Karuk tribes of Northern California show a clear link between a decline in access to salmon, and a decline in the health of Salmon is one of the healthiest meats in the world. It must be recognized that salmon is more than a "net gain" for the economics of the region; it is the very foundation of health for rural Alaskans.

Glorious Fourth of July draws crowd to Front Street

By Diana Haecker

Fog hung low over Nome early July 4th. The wet, cold bone-chilling morning didn't seem inviting for a run up Anvil Mountain, shrouded in low clouds, but 24 runners and their cheerleaders made it out of bed in time and stood ready to rock'n roll at the 35th Anvil Mountain Run start line on Front Street. Organizer Leo Rasmussen noted that no runner was younger than 18 and older than 60, meaning that he could pack up and store away his trophies for those age categories. At 8 o'clock the runners took off to conquer not the mountain but the fog. Even those with knowledge of the mountain's terrain got lost in the gray-out as visibility was near zero. While most found their way back to Nome, a visitor missed the turnoff to the top of Anvil and kept going towards Dexter but was retrieved by friends. Rasmussen made a point in congratulating her to be the second person ever to continue on to Dexter in this particular run.

Despite the visibility handicap, the top runners finished the race in respectable times: See Anvil Mt. Run story.

As soon as all runners were accounted for, the miracle happened. The clouds parted and the sun came through, setting the stage for the annual Nome Fourth of July parade, followed by the presentation of the colors by the Nome Boy Scout troop. Nome Mayor Denise Michels welcomed the crowd and Harbormaster Joy Baker sang the National Anthem as well as the Alaska Flag Song. After the blessing, Michels welcomed special guest, film producer Thom Beers with Original Productions who is currently filming the second season of the reality TV show "Bering Sea Gold" in Nome. Beers handed a $20,000 check to Julie Yoder Elmore with the Nome Rotary Club for their project to enhance and beautify East End Park.

After the formalities were over, Michels said, "Let the games begin."

For the next three hours, hundreds and hundreds of Nomeites participated in all kinds of street games, foot and bike races, egg races, slow bike races, gunnysack, wheelbarrow, three-legged and shoe scramble races. Toddlers, some eager to run into their parent's arm, some disoriented by the cheering crowd closing in on them, were a great source of entertainment. Elder Dan Karmun participated in the egg race and safely carried an egg all the way to the finish line at City Hall, where a big cheer greeted him. Teenagers and Nome-grown "kids" returning for the summer from college showed that they didn't lose their competitive spirit and gave it all at the footraces. Not to forget the Herbie Locke Memorial pie-eating contest that left some participants feeling a bit queasy after the rapid pie consumption. The sun smiled on the activities while a light breeze cooled participants down. As tradition dictates, the street games ended with the rope-pull contest East against West, with West being victorious.

Then the whole party moved up Bering Street, where the Nome Volunteer Fire Department held the annual ice cream feed and raffled off bikes. While the day started with clouds hanging low, it ended with brilliant sunshine befitting the occasion of the day, to celebrate the independence of this nation.

Obituary

Jacob Ahwinona

Jacob Ahwinona was born on April 10, 1923 at Death Valley on the Fish River where his grandparents lived. He was born premature and could fit into one's hand. His grandma would wrap him up in rabbit skins, and place him on the wood stove to keep him warm.

Jacob moved to Nome from White Mountain at the age of 17 to work for the Mining Company. He told a white lie about his age to work. He had lived in Nome since then. Jacob worked several jobs to support a family. The job that he enjoyed the most was with Nome Public Schools as the building maintenance man. He loved interacting with the kids everyday, all were special to him. He also loved it because he was working with his hands and loved helping others. He retired June 1, 1990.

Even in retirement Jacob remained very busy, working with the Native Corporation Boards, traveling to meetings for what seemed to be too many days for his family.

Jacob and Hannah Ahwinona were married February 20, 1950 in Unalakleet, the church was so packed that there were people even standing outside. Together they raised four of their children and one grandson. Freddie, Cynthia, Debra, Dora and grandson David. Also their nieces, nephews and their friends' kids. Their house was always filled with love, good food, a good story and laughter. Throughout his life he has made many great friends.

Jacob believed that the children are our future, and they deserved a good education, both in the western and Inupiaq ways. He believed education should include the knowledge of traditional values: knowledge of hunting, trapping, fishing, and gathering traditional foods. This is where the real education started. He and

Hannah also taught their children to work hard and finish what they start. "If you're not hurtin' you did not work." —Jacob Ahwinona

Jacob leaves his children Cynthia, Debra her husband Raymond Sr. and their children Andrew, Rachel, Florence, and Raymond Jr. Their grandchildren Fred Jacob, Henry and Cain, Dora and Greg and their children Leah, Kristian and Karlin, sister-inlaw Laura Paniptchuck and sister Arlene Soxie.

Jacob joins his wife Hannah of 56 years, his parents Joshua and Nora, sisters Helen Carlson, Mary and Ethel Ahwinona, brothers Fred, Carl, and Sam Ahwinona, his grandparents, nieces, nephews and many cousins.

Jacob started everyday with a prayer and a positive attitude. His many stories, words of advise, praise and comfort will be greatly missed by all who knew him.

You are never alone. They say you will never be lonely from the start of each day to it's end if you walk life's path with God in your heart, and side by side with a friend."

On the way a woman who has been bleeding for 12 years reaches out to Jesus, touches the hem of his garment and is instantly healed. Doctors had been unable to heal her, even when she spent all her Additionally, her community shunned her, considering her unclean because of her bleeding. She used all the strength and faith she could muster to even appear in public. Right away Jesus stopped, sensing that power had left him. He asks, "Who touched me?"

The woman fell to Jesus' feet just as Jairus had earlier, admitting to Jesus that it was she who touched him. Instead of being harsh, Jesus had compassion. He called her "daughter" and told her to go in peace and that her faith had made her process. Yet, Jesus continued on to Jairus' house and into the girl's room. With her parents and three disciples at his side, Jesus told the girl to get up from her sleep and she did. One of the beautiful messages we can take from this story is that Jesus has time for each one of us, no matter what our status is in society. People in positions of power, like Jairus, need Jesus. People considered the lowliest in society, like the woman, need Jesus. People who fit somewhere in between need Jesus. We are all broken in some way and in need of healing. God through the Holy Spirit is with us, ready to heal us, sometimes in expected ways and other times in unexpected ways. Like Jairus and the woman, we can reach out in faith and trust that God will heal even the deepest hurts in our body, mind, and spirit. From what do you need healing?

CHIEF'S NOTES:

City allows for ATV operation on ets, there is no provision for ATV operation on STATE roadways which include Front Street, Bering Street, Seppala Drive, Nome-Beltz Highway, and Center Creek Road. If you are operating an ATV on any STATE roadway, you will be subject to being stopped by a law enforcement officer. If at all possible, choose a route that does not travel on these roadways or travel to the far right side of the road at a speed not to exceed 20 miles per hour. Passengers are not allowed to ride on ATVs unless the ATV is specifically designed for passengers to ride. There has been an increase in ATVs violating this provision and traveling at unsafe speeds. Voluntary compliance will reduce the likelihood of official

Also, please be reminded that any operator of an ATV on any roadway must be at least 16 years old AND have a valid driver's license. Helmet use is strongly encouraged to reduce the risk of injury.

Finally, please do not engage in open burning within the City limits as open fires present a true danger to the entire community. Nome has an extensive history of significant fires that have destroyed a large portion of the City on more than one occasion. With structures built closely together; an ample supply of combustible materials gether; an ample supply of combustible material; and a wind that is always present to fan any flame open burning is a true threat to public safety. BELMONT POINT GOLD FEVER— Rough waters outside the Nome Port and Harbor kept the majority of gold dredges parked at Belmont Point, on Saturday, July 7.

good-sized collection. A lot of it people haven't seen. How this is all put together is very important. Not only is the preservation of each collection—City and Kawerak important, there's a chain of custody going on. We're trying to get donors to give us more. They want to be assured their stuff is going to go [to the proper place], for better term, chain of custody, we have to have an agreement on how we're going to mix those two collections" Lean said.

"Boy, I hope we do this right! I hope we leave the [curator work] to the professionals. This is a museum, not an office building. Let's make sure we use this for what we told the grantor we would use it for," he said.

John K. Handeland, member of the Museum and Library Commission conceded that the two museums could live together perhaps, but Kawerak should not use square footage for office space.

Commission member Cussy Kauer also agreed, "opposed to any more office space going into that building."

Some making comment agreed with leasing to Kawerak, but protested using museum space for offices.

Councilman Stan Andersen, who voted later in favor of letting Kawerak into the museum building, extracted a verbal agreement from Melanie Bahnke that Kawerak would commit to a long-term lease so the City would not hold the bag on a larger space to accommodate Kawerak's uses.

Bahnke agreed, adding that Kawerak was interested in leasing space from "your existing plan, not to have you build a bigger building."

In other business the Council:
• Extended Nome Police Chief
John J Papasodora's employment contract by three years, with annual salary of $101,623 for the first year and a 3 percent increase for each of years two and three.
Papasodora will accrue 20 hours of personal leave per month and may drive his City vehicle inside and outside of town and keep the vehicle within City limits overnight.

• Heard Mike Benchoff during citizen comments ask for help understanding why he was being required to remove his tug boatdredge conversion vessel from the harbor, a request he saw as unequal application of rules to his case and an application that ran afoul of the 14th amendment equal protection clause of the U.S. constitution. He also questioned the threat of his boat being deemed derelict while he was paying storage. He claimed to have paid port fees in the amount of $20,000. He said he was willing to litigate against the City. Miner Jim Hanson also spoke on Benchoff's behalf. City administrators and councilmembers did not comment, except for Mayor Denise Michels who said the Rustler had leaked oil in the past. It had not, Benchoff responded, except when it rolled over during a fall storm. The Port of Nome had given Benchoff a latest deadline of July 9 to move his vessel or possibly be barred from port

• Passed a resolution supporting the Alaska Coastal Management Initiative to come before voters that would give both state and local governments and coastal districts a voice in development of coastal waters and lands and provide a framework for mitigating disputes among competing uses and demands for coastal resources. The Coastal Management Program could bring local knowledge into play on development decisions but would not allow local veto of projects." When we were part of the Coastal Zone Management Program, we had a good grasp of what was going on within City limits," Charlie Lean said.

• Approved issuing a utility revenue anticipation note capped at $8.06 million for buying diesel fuel for the Nome Joint Utility System's generators. NJUS Manager John Handeland estimated diesel fuel to run ballpark about $3.10 per gallon, or closer to $3 than $4, he said.

• Approved a local match of $267,513 for an agreement on Port Road improvements among City of Nome, state Dept of Transportation and Public Facilities. Port Road continually sustains heavy loads of gravel and container truck traffic throughout the shipping season and heavy use year around. It needs widening, paving, drainage maintenance, sidewalks and other safety improvements.

• Approved a modification of the City's land purchase from Alaska Gold Co. for Nome's new Snake River Bridge for a total of $18,000. The State of Alaska would pay the additional $3,000 incurred by the revision.

• Heard a citizen express concern that the Animal Shelter has closed, leaving stray and escaped animals to uncertain disposal, even a "nickel's worth" of lead. The citizen also expressed concern that the shelter has been moved from Port Road to clear the way for construction to a spot by the Nome Public Safety Building where barking dogs likely annoyed police staff. Requests for proposals to run the shelter went unanswered, Josie Bahnke, city manager, said.

• Joined Knodel in commending Amy Smithheisler for almost 10 years' service as animal shelter and control operator. Smithheisler's contract expired July 10. She did not renew. Bahnke said the City administration was looking at ways to provide temporary service using volunteers.

• Heard City Manager Josie Bahnke report that demolition of the Wien Building, eyesore on Front Street, would begin this week. Knodel pressed for a deadline for completion, and not August 2013.

• Experienced a moment of silence when Knodel asked whom citizens should call as regards animal issues until the shelter opened again—Bahnke, city manager, or Nome Police Dept. Bahnke and Chief Papasodora pointed at each other.

34, most of the emergency repair is being done by fixing the road after storm damage. Workers are finished with maintenance repairs and are now reconstructing damaged road sections, placing riprap to beef up the beach shoulder, hauling more gravel in and surfacing the road with dust palliative. This project is supposed to be completed by October 31.

Also on the Nome-Council Highway, Pro-West Contractors began to work between mile 4 and mile 16 on filling the cuts between Farley's Camp and Cape Nome. DOT construction engineer Lisa Coyle said that the road will be elevated and shifted to the north, and that there will be a ditch to the South. The cuts will not be completely filled, but the resulting road height will be about the same as the bank it is built against, she said. The project includes culvert installation and new surfacing. The majority of the earthwork is going to be done next summer.

As for all construction sites, the DOT asks motorists to expect single lane road sections and delays. The project comes at a cost of almost $12 million and slated to be completed October 1,

Yet further down the road between mile 62 and 73, contractor Phillips and Jordan are working on resurfacing the road, to improve the drainage. The project started last year and is expected to be done by the end of July.

The Bonanza Channel Bridge is slated to get new paint and Pro-West Contractors are working on the $1.3 million project. DOT's Lisa Coyle said that as of Saturday, half of the scaffolding under the bridge is in place. She said that a maximum clearance of six feet can be expected and that at high tide boats—even without windshields— are not able to safely travel under the bridge. During working hours, there will only be a single lane on the bridge and motorists are asked to go slow. Construction is scheduled to begin July 16.

Evan Booth, DOT superintendent for the Northern Region said that road repairs are scheduled between mile 30 and mile 40 of the Teller Highway. Booth said that a special DOT bridge crew is coming up to Nome this summer to perform redecking and repair of several bridges on the Teller and Kougarok roads, including redecking the Snake River bridge on the Teller highway. The DOT is also replacing and repairing signs on all Nome roads and the process will be ongoing through this summer.

At the Nome airport, the DOT is this year fixing a dip at the west end of the main runway. Next year, airport safety area improvements are scheduled to begin.

In Kotzebue, the safety improvements are in the last phases and this year's construction began July 8. Last season a large section of the runway was excavated and poor material replaced with an engineered fill. Two inches of pavement was left for the winter surface. Another two inches will be placed this season. Runway closures are scheduled for July 16 through 17 and July 30 through 31. During those dates, jet service won't be available, said Lisa Coyle, but provisions were made for medevacs in emergencies.

In town, Nome Joint Utilities continue the replacement of water and sewer mains at Fourth Avenue between K and N Street

Early morning fire rips through center of Teller

By Sandra L. Medearis

The cry came early Thursday morning through summer's open windows in Teller village, 70 miles or so from Nome.

Fire!

Joe Garnie, Teller city official, got the news by phone.

"I got the call around 3 a.m. I grabbed the dozer and we pushed fuel tanks, and a shed full of propane tanks away from buildings," he said.

the scene via phone around 5 a.m. "They had two hoses in the ocean, then the pump went out. The whole town is looking around for equipment. I'm looking for cam-locks and pump fittings right now to help get some connections together. It's melted a plastic tank across the street. Blodgett's store has burned down and it is in the adjoining buildings."

The four structures belonged to the Blodgett estate. The fire started in the former Blodgett store, Teller Commercial Co., on the main drag around 2 a.m., tore through two more empty buildings and finished with a building housing the Mary's Igloo Traditional Council that collapsed at 6:50 a.m. The Teller Catholic Church across the street from the conflagration escaped the fire.

The store, founded by the late Bob Blodgett, had been closed for 10 to 15 years. There were no injuries. Aside from the buildings, the village lost its front-end loader, essential for clearing roads for the school bus and clearing the way for garbage and sanitation operations.

Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. personnel who arrived in Teller on Bering Air and additional crews who came up the road from Nome by vehicle fought the fire. They snuffed it

Council postpones banning Benchoff from port

By Sandra L. Medearis

This week finds miner Mike Benchoff still in the small boat harbor puttering on the tugboat Rustler despite an attempt by the Nome Port Commission to get him and his vessel voted out of the port forever.

The port panel forwarded a resolution to the Nome Common Council following a July 11 special meeting that would authorize the port director to hire contractors to remove Benchoff's tug boat Rustler and clean up oil and other hazardous substances, authorize the city attorney to file suit against Benchoff to collect the costs as well as ban him from using or accessing the Port of Nome. City and port administrators say Benchoff has failed numerous deadlines to remove his boat and belongings as well as violated the Port of Nome tariff—and he owes the Port around $3,500.

However, rather than rubber stamp the resolution at a July 12 special meeting, the Council amended the resolution to allow Benchoff to remain in the harbor with a new deadline of Aug. 15.

However, for the Port Commission and Council, the devil may well be in the details. Whereas the City's practice in notifying the public about upcoming meetings is to tape papers and agendas to the door of Nome City Hall, state law demands due process in that when a meeting is to discuss an individual's rights, the individual must be noticed of the meeting. Otherwise, it is possible that the action taken could be voided.

Passage of the resolution calls for Benchoff's banishment and that it's in the "best interest of the City and Port of Nome to permanently prohibit Mr. Benchoff from accessing the Port in the future."

According to the resolution: "Mr. Benchoff is hereby banned from using or accessing the Port of Nome property for any reason. The City Police Department is directed to

Port money: Now is the time to make contacts

By Sandra L. Medearis

City of Nome's port advancement and port development consultant Paul Fuhs has given the City administration good marks in creating an atmosphere for receiving port expansion funds and courting construction on a deep water port to service expanding resource development in the northern seas.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

Fuhs spoke with the Nome Port Commission late last month, saying that critical dates were coming up this fall in the statewide port picture and Nome should get ahead of these. Fuhs, once Nome's city manager and former Dutch Harbor port head, advised the port commission that the City should step up lobbying and get budget requests in well in advance of the governor's capital budget in October. There would be a public hearing on target ports in October and target ports identified in November for further study. The study on an optimum port placement plan comprises the Arctic Port Study underway by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and Alaska Dept. of Trans-

Nome needs to provide information to DOT and legislators, and make all the favorable connections possible to show that Nome's port is reliable, with continued ability to serve industry critical to Nome. The Arctic Port Study will look at industry needs. The U.S. Coast Guard and NOAA want to co-locate, but don't want to pick a port based on political considerations. The AP Study has a minus 35-foot Mean Low Water design basis. During production, Shell will have three ice breaking tender vessels working from an arctic port 10 months per year. There will be a need for increased spill response capabilities, Fuhs noted.

Nome can show the traffic demand for a larger port, Fuhs said. He listed changes that would occur in the next 10 years underscoring Nome's importance as a deep-water port city:

- Offshore and onshore oil development.
- Northern Sea Route that runs to Europe across the top of the northern hemisphere from Vladivostok to Scandinavia along the north of Russia. This route would save a phenomenal amount of money over shipping routes going through the Panama Canal, Fuhs observed. According to his figures, the number of transit voyages increased from four in 2010 to 34 in 2011, along with a similar increase in volumes of cargo.

- similar increase in volumes of cargo.
 Mineral development.
- Population growth from economic development.
- Increased transshipment of local goods with lightering to smaller communities.
- Increased risk of oil spills and maritime accidents for which Nome could be a service port and emergency response center with equipment and boats at ready
- Increased traffic with gravel and ore shipments stemming from high mineral prices.
- Support for fisheries and offshore mineral research.

Expanding the port will cost money. The Port of Nome budget shows a surplus of about $350,000 per year. Planned center dock construction pencils at about $13 million for construction estimates. Replacing the barge ramp on the west side of the port has an estimated cost of $3 million. Extending and dredging a deep-water port comes out anywhere from $50 million to $200 million. The City has a current bonding capacity of $3 million, Fuhs told commissioners.

Nome needs to make a drive to get federal and state funding to make these dreams come true, Fuhs said.

"You can pay for the ramp with the revenues you have while interest is low. Bond banks want to see some local skin in the game," he said.

Fuhs cautioned that Port Clarence and other northern points are in the running to be selected for funding as a deep-water port. Nome should know the wisdom of staying on good terms by considering formation of a

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In our continuing effort to reincarnate the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to present "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk Rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are preserved forever as his legacy in the "McDaniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. If it ever rains, stop by Nome's Museum located to the west of the BOT.

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget Newspaper, the brothers Wilfred and Ed along with their hired hand Ed Rouse were mining on a pretty good schedule. Just when things seemed to be going well tragedy strikes...

Went to bed at 7a.m. I was aroused by a cry from Ed and rushed out. Rouse was wound up in rope on the gypsy. Brother Ed and I took knives and cut him out. When we took him out his left leg fell off, cut dead away. Terrible sight. Sent for a doctor and he came in half an hour. Did all in human power, but he sank gradually and died at 6:45 p.m. just as we were preparing to operate on his leg. We dug a hole in the tundra and placed his body in the frozen earth until we dispose of it. Ed had gone to make arrangements with the undertaker. Letters -

Dear Editor,

I disagree with Joe Garnie's letter. Ever since the passing of my late uncle Wilfred and aunt Cathy Kakaruk, longtime owners of the Kakaruk herd in Teller, it has been a free-for-all butchering of reindeer in

Some families and individuals were promised unlimited lifetime supply of reindeer by past managers. At the current rate reindeer were continually being butchered, herd numbers would gradually decrease and could not sustain such future losses. I do not ever recall in the past when the Teller Traditional Council ever had any involvement in the management of the Kakaruk herd when my uncle Wilfred or when my late brother Patrick "Rudy" Pushruk were living and each had the reindeer herd.

As a past Teller Traditional Council/Board member and as a current enrollee, I feel that the Teller Traditional Council should first notify all enrollees before making any decisions or taking any actions regarding this matter on our behalf.

Ever since BIA posted the notice in the May 24, 2012 Nome Nugget edition, people are no longer butchering reindeer as before. Thank you,

James Pushruk Teller, AK 99778

Nome Gold Rush

July 23, 1900

Wrote a letter home this morning Ed and Mr. Denney gone to Nome to see what can be done about the body. We thought of shipping it home but don't know what the expense will be. Joe Millard came down and took dinner with me today while Ed was away. It seems very lonesome here now when one is alone. Today is a beautiful day. It seems like California here now. The tundra is all out in bloom. Lots of pretty flowers and many varieties. I did some washing made a riffle and cleaned up the boxes while Ed was downtown. Ed heard that the government is going to establish a camp on Nome River for destitute men. People are leaving as fast as the steamers can take them.

July 24, 1900

It is now 8:45 p.m. and Ed and I have just returned from burying Dean. We took him to the undertakers and had the body embalmed and placed in a zinc-lined box. Ed and Joe Millard and myself went out to the graveyard and dug his grave. We dug the grave in frozen ground and it was hard as concrete to dig in. We worked 3 hours and dug only four feet. We buried him ourselves and got through at 5:30 p.m.

We are worn out. It's enough to out grey hairs in a fellow's head to be through what Ed and I have. When we took the body put of the tundra and placed in a box that we made, Dr. Tenney read some verses from the Bible and delivered a very eloquent prayer. It was a very touching scene. A dozen or so rough looking, but tenderhearted men gathered around the remains with bare heads and moist eyes while the minister asked the Master's sympathy for the bereaved family and friends. We then placed the body in a wagon and took him to the undertakers and at 4 p.m. we took him to his last resting place in the frozen earth of this far off land of the north.

Ed and I are completely worn out. We have been through a terrible experience in the last three days since we cut poor Dean out of the gypsy.

We were with him constantly till the end. I laid him out and wrapped him up. Ed and I built the box to carry him in and dug the grave and buried him. We have had a hard siege to go through.

I put the engine in running order yesterday. It got the spark pitman bent double and out of adjustment. We will rest tomorrow and get ready for work again.

July 25, 1900

We did not do very much today. We worked some this afternoon so as to make a run tomorrow. I made some light bread today and it is baking now. It looks fine, just like mother makes. We panned on the cleanup but did not get through. Ed did some washing this morning. We will now have some clean clothes to wear when we start home in the fall.

July 26, 1900

We went to work at 9 a.m. and struck some fine pay, got 25¢ to the pan. Had some rain today. Had thunder in the afternoon. We worked out about 40 cubic yards of earth today. We all feel tired. We hired a man this morning to help us for a few days. We pay him $7 per day. We are going to make a location on the beach this evening. We heard that people are locating the beach and trying to get a percentage from the plant owners. We will try and hold our own up here. Others have done as we are going to do. I don't think there is anything in it but we will be safe anyway. Took a photograph of a beautiful sunset last evening.

July 27, 1900

Started the diggings at 7 a.m. We have one man hired. Today has been very warm, almost 100° I think. We heard last night that there was a scheme among the tundra owners to stop the machines on the beach. The tundra owners try to hold the beach and the beach miners don't respect their views. A chap came to our place today and said he represented the owners of the tundra and wanted our name. I expect there is trouble ahead. He also went to a pump next to us. We are all very tired this eve after a hard day's work in the heat. Started to write a little home.

July 28, 1900

We made a clean up this morning and set the boxes and made a run in the afternoon. Made a very good clean up. About 100 dollars for 19 hours run. The tundra men are nosing around some but are not talking.

force this ban through all reasonable and legal means, including citing or arresting Mr. Benchoff for criminal trespassing in the event he tries to access port property without authorization."

Port staff came to the meeting loaded for bear, with 31 color photos of the Rustler and Benchoff's other boat, 99 Cent Romance (no longer in the harbor), some taken during Benchoff's absence (engine room, now degreased and painted) and without permission, four pages of unsigned, dated diary type anecdotal notes collected by port staff on Benchoff's activities and progress in preparing the boat to be moved.

The port staff could board a boat without permission according to the Port of Nome Tariff in an emergency, say, like the boat was sinking, Mayor Denise Michels interjected.

The 24-pages also included a list of invoices for $19,294 on which $15,735 had been paid leaving $3,559 for June 30 unpaid. Also in the packet were unsigned hand printed notes from a hearing from the July 9 Council meeting during which Benchoff and miner Jim Hanson spoke on his behalf.

The 33 anecdotal notes, collected between May 12 and July 10, titled "Mike Benchoff Dates of Work" start

5.23.12: I did see Mike working on his vessel today. He was on board removing equipment from the deck. He arrived mid afternoon [sic]. I did not see him at his vessel when I left at 5 p.m.

5.24.12: I did not see Mike working on his vessel today during my shift. I checked multiple times between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The July 11 Council meeting started off with a bang when a vote to approve the agenda to kick Benchoff out of the port failed. Council members Stan Andersen, Jerald Brown and Mary Knodel voted yes, but Councilman Louie Green Sr. voted no.

"I think this meeting is not an emergency," Green said

With Councilmembers Randy Pomeranz and Josie Stiles absent, the motion failed one vote short of the required four.

Mayor Denise Michels sought an opinion from City Attorney, Brooks Chandler, on what to do. Adjourn the meeting, Chandler said, via phone. Then Pomeranz walked in and fired the starting gun by voting yes on the agenda.

Before City Clerk Tom Moran read the resolution against Benchoff, he and several supporters spoke during Citizens' Comments. On the other hand, Howard Farley blamed Benchoff for a dirty port.

In his address to the Council, Benchoff's statements included the following.

• The Rustler leaked fuel when it rolled over during a storm last year.

• He has never been fined or cited by state Dept. of Environmental Conservation or the U.S. Coast Guard concerning pollution around the Rustler.

• He could not remove the vessel from the water within a deadline of 14 days when the Port of Nome declared the harbor "ice-free" as the engine room was still full of ice, making work impossible.

• He had been denied due process.

"Why was my due process circumvented by meeting yesterday (Port Commission, July 10) without my knowledge?"

• He has been singled out and made an example of. "I should not be forced to spend money to litigate to force you to acknowledge the Constitution of the State of Alaska [concerning due process]."

• State law makes it illegal to deny access to navigable waters. The small boat harbor is in the mouth of the Snake River.

• Fuel spilling from the Rustler came from the port staff ordering him to put the Rustler halfway up the gravel ramp by Crowley Dock during the fall storm, so that when the water came back, the boat rolled

• He had pulled an engine weighing seven tons from the Rustler and was replacing it with a lighter engine to make the boat lighter for when a crane becomes available to take the boat from the harbor.

Gold miners who backed Benchoff attended the Council meeting.

Gold miner Cliff McHenry also noted that Benchoff had not been noticed of meetings discussing his case. He compared the Rustler's nuisance with the Wien Building on Front Street, many times ordered abated and still standing. He noted that an issue with the sheet pile along the south wall of the Small Boar Harbor had caused other boats to flip over, causing the City ongoing liability. "Mike did not have control of that storm last year. It was force majeure (event beyond human control).

"I think Mike's done a hell of a job taking the engine out," McHenry

Howard Farley had a different opinion. He had been using the Port of Nome for over 20 years. Now the port was dirty with diesel and other pollutants that he could smell. He accused Benchoff of being one of the main polluters. Anyone knew you don't leave a boat in the water over winter, he added.

Miner Larry Assad also spoke. "I've seen this guy bust his bunions to make this right," he said. "We're the people of Nome. We have to watch out for each other."

At this point, Farley and Assad entered a shouting match. Michels threatened them with expulsion from the meeting were there further lapses in decorum.

"If you get the vessel, what are you going to do with it?" Jim Hanson asked. "It will be another Lulu. I don't think this is anyone's fault. Mr. Benchoff is not an outlaw. He is a teetotaler. He doesn't own a gun. He is trying to rectify the problem as soon as he can" Hanson said soon as he can," Hanson said. Fred Moody joined the miners support for Benchoff.

"Mr. Benchoff is in a precarious position," he said. "You can't look back at your life and see yourself in a precarious position?"

The saga over the Rustler has gone on for two years. Harbormaster Joy Baker and the Port Commission have the following beefs:

• The Rustler has been inoperative for more than a year and is taking up much needed space in the small boat harbor.

• The Rustler has caused oil to spill into the waters of the harbor on numerous occasions and caused sheens on the water this season and last in violation of the Port of Nome

Toriff

• Benchoff has been given notice many times that the failure to prevent discharges would result in the City removing his boat from the water.

• The City declared the vessel "ice-free" on June 7 and gave Benchoff 14 days and more to remove the Rustler, but he did not and otherwise failed to fulfill conditions in a "Record of Decision."

• Benchoff's account is substantially past due, and his area has not been cleared of junk, in violation of direct orders of port staff and Record of Decision.

• The Port of Nome Tariff allows Benchoff to be banned based on failure to abide by the tariff.

Asked by the Council how long he would need to ready the boat for removal, Benchoff replied that it would be a week at the soonest and two weeks at the latest.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel made a motion to amend the resolution to become effective on July 30. The motion died for lack of a second.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz took another stab to amend the resolution to become effective Aug. 15. The Council approved the amendment and passed the resolution effective Aug. 15. Andersen cast a no vote.

Shell drill rig caught after drifting toward Unalaska

By Diana Haecker

As the Shell flotilla consisting of two drill rigs and numerous support vessels is waiting in Dutch Harbor for favorable sea and less icy conditions in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, one of the drill rigs, the Noble Discoverer dragged anchor and drifted toward the shore of Unalaska Island on Saturday, July 14.

The Coast Guard received a report at 5:18 p.m. Saturday that the Discoverer drifted 175-yards from its anchorage toward land. According to the Coast Guard, the crew let out more anchor chain to slow the drift and called for a tug assist. The tugs towed the vessel back to a safe water depth. The crew aboard the Noble Discoverer told Coast Guard investigators that while they came extremely close to land they did not feel any impact or vibration to indicate that the vessel ran aground. The weather at the time was stormy with sustained winds of 27 mph with gusts to 35 mph.

"There are no reports of injuries to the crew, pollution or damage to the Noble Discoverer," said Lt. James Fothergill, supervisor Coast Guard Marine Safety detachment Unalaska and the lead investigating officer on the case. Fothergill said that while the vessel master reported he did not believe the vessel grounded, it cannot be confirmed by the Coast Guard at this time.

According to a Shell press release, remote operated vehicles inspected the Discoverer and found no indication of damage to the ship's hull. They hired on a diving team that is slated to arrive on Friday to conduct another inspection. While the divers are checking the outside, the Coast Guard will inspect the interior of the vessel's hull. "Our goal remains flawless operations [...] Even a "near miss" is unacceptable. While an internal investigation will determine why the Discoverer slipped anchor, we are pleased with the speed and effectiveness of the mitigation measures we had in place," the Shell press release reads.

Shell acquired offshore oil and gas leases in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas, embarking on the first-ever exploration campaign offshore Alaska this summer.

Greenpeace, an environmental group opposing Shell's drilling and exploration plans in the Arctic, also issued a press release questioning the vessels' ability to handle rough waters. "Shell can't keep it's drill rig under control in a protected harbor, so what will happen when it faces 20-foot swells and sea ice while drilling in the Arctic?" Greenpeace lead Arctic campaigner Jackie Dragon said.

Divers on Friday will clarify whether or not the Discoverer actually ran aground.

The Discoverer also has issues that need to be cleared up with the Environmental Protection Agency. Two weeks ago, Shell submitted an application to revise the Outer Continental Shelf prevention of significant deterioration air permit issued for the Discoverer drillship operations in the Chukchi Sea. The EPA is reviewing the application to see if Shell's proposed permit revisions are appropriate. The EPA website says that any proposed revisions to the Discoverer air permit will be subject to public notice and comment period.

Human remains identified as missing Kyle Komok's of Teller

By Diana Haecker

The State Medical Examiner positively identified the human remains found near Brevig Mission as those of missing Kyle Komok. A resident found the unrecognizable body of Komok on July 8, about one mile east of Brevig Mission. Alaska State Troopers say that the identification was made with the help of dental records.

AST responded when the body was found and sent to the Medical Examiner's Office for identification.

Two men from the general area, lost at separate times, have been missing. Kyle Komok, 26, has been missing since the November storm in 2011 that pummeled the Norton Sound and Bering Strait area with hurricane force winds. Komok was last seen around 4 p.m. on November 9, 2011 riding a four-wheeler toward the north point of the Teller spit. Teller Search and Rescue combed the area for almost two days and conducted a boat search at Grantley Harbor as weather allowed, but called off the effort in the evening of November 10.

The other man from Teller still missing is Kenneth Lee, who disappeared while snowmachining from Brevig Mission to Teller in December 2010.

MYSTERIOUS FOG— Fog settles over the Snake River at Belmont Point as dredges and boats are tied up for the night.

THE DOCK WALK

By Diana Haecker

The Nome Port and Harbor is a busy place these days. Nome harbor master Joy Baker updates Nome Nugget readers in this weekly column on shipping news. Baker said that last week, the barge ramp was a very busy spot with 13 landing craft trips coming in to load village cargo.

"It was an in-out-in-out, round-robin kind of a week," Baker reports. In addition, two research vessels – the Professor Khromov and the Norseman II visited Nome and headed out again. A gravel barge loaded with Nome sand sailed to Dutch Harbor. Two sailboats, the Tokimata, the Upchuck, arrived in Nome and are still here as of Monday, waiting for ice to clear out of the north as they hope to navigate the Northwest Passage.

This week, the number of registered boats went up to 70 dredges with 24 dredging support vessels and 19 fishing vessels. It's starting to get crowded and tight in the harbor.

• Port expansion

regional port authority with Teller, sure to become a player if the deepwater port developed at Port Clarence, Fuhs said.

As for Port Clarence, "right off shore there is 90 feet with 45 feet [of water] right off the bar. This is a strong contender," Fuhs said.

Nome has shallower water offshore, calling for excavation and extension of the causeway for a deeper harbor. However, Nome's depth studies are out of date.

But, Port of Nome continues to make upgrades with work and planning in progress:

- Nome Harbor middle dock, under design.
- Inner harbor high ramp, under design.
- Snake River floats, final stages of design, work begins soon.
- Purchase of land owned by Telco and Nome Gold for Port of Nome expansion under discussion.
- City Manager Josie Bahnke and harbormaster, Joy Baker discussing with Sitnasuak Native Corp. on land use alternatives on port industrial pad for Port of Nome and Bonanza Fuel expansion.

GOOD DAY FOR FISHING - Fishermen in Teller are busy setting nets, bringing in their harvest and then spending hours cutting and drying their chum and pink salmon on the beach.

Fish arrive late, king run wea

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound salmon runs have arrived late this year, reports Jim Menard, area manager for Norton Sound and Kotzebue, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. He said run strengths are as forecast—weak for kings, average for chums and pinks.

The ADF&G closed subsistence salmon fishing with set gillnets for king salmon in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet river drainages and in the marine waters of the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts on July 11. Menard said assessment data indicated that the projected North River king salmon escapement would be well short of the lower end of the escapement goal range of 1,200 to 2,600 kings.

Sport fishing for kings also closed July 11, and the use of bait is prohibited in all fresh waters of the Unalakleet and Shaktoolik River drainages. Sport fishermen who incidentally hook kings must immediately release them.

Subsistence salmon fishing currently is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week in the fresh and marine waters of the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts, but set gillnets used in marine waters must have a mesh size of 6 inches or less, and gillnets used in fresh water areas must have a mesh size of 4-1/2 inches or less. Beach seining is allowed seven days a week, but any king salmon captured must be immediately released in the water.

Menard said the Norton Sound commercial salmon harvest totaled 107,000 pink salmon and 13,300 chum salmon through July 13. He said the pink salmon harvest is on track to be the best since 1998. Commercial fishing openings are being staggered between subdistricts based on tender, floating processor and plant capacity," he added.

Norton Sound Seafood Products has announced initial 2012 commercial prices of 55 cents per pound for chum salmon and 40 cents per pound for pink salmon delivered to the dock in Unalakleet or to the floating processor Norton Sound. NSSP is paying 50 cents per pound for chums and 35 cents per pound for pinks delivered to Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. tender vessels. In 2011 NSSP paid starting prices of 72 cents per pound for chums and 25 cents per pound for pinks landed at the dock in Unalakleet.

Menard reports total commercial salmon harvests by each Norton Sound subdistrict though July 13 as follows: Unalakleet-5,460 chums and 49,500 pinks; Shaktoolik-6,500 chums and 17,000 pinks; Norton Bay-1,000 chums and 36,300 pinks; and Elim-300 chums and 4,800 pinks. The first commercial fishing period of the season in the Golovin subdistrict began July 15 with a 24hour pink directed fishing period, he added.

In the Kotzebue district, commercial fishermen harvested 14,765 chums in four 8-hour fishing periods last week. "This is the best first week catch since 1995," Menard noted.

Menard provided the following cumulative counts at Norton Sound salmon escapement projects through

Norton Sound district

- Unalakleet River test fish-11
- kings, 395 chums and 215 pinks. North River tower-318
- kings, 905 chums and 37,858 pinks. Unalakleet River floating weir– 115 kings, 22,976 chums, 211,060
- pinks and 76 sockeyes. • Shaktoolik sonar-Cumulative passage since July 10 is estimated to be 152,000 salmon with an apportionment of 400 kings, 13,600

Are artificial sweeteners good for your health?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

When I was in medical school our biochemistry professor gave a twopart lecture on the most important nutrients for the brain.

"Your brain needs two things to survive," he said, "oxygen and glusugar in the diet. The idea is that artificial sweeteners allow a person to enjoy overeating without actually ing diet soft drinks, yogurt, gum, and dessert foods.

There are many brands of sweeteners. The FDA has approved three broad sugar substitute categories: artificial sweeteners (saccharin, aspartame, and sucrolose); sugar alcohols (xylitol, stevia, and mannitol); and natural sweeteners (honey, molasses, and agave nectar).

All FDA-approved sweeteners are considered safe, meaning no sweetener is known to cause cancer or other medical problem at normal dietary doses. According to the National Cancer Institute, no study of artificial sweeteners has shown a clear increase in cancer risk for hu-

After an hour of lecturing, he transitioned to the second half of the leckilling you," he continued, "oxygen and glucose.'

Glucose, which is just sugar in its most basic form, is actually good for you. It serves as a primary fuel of the body along with fats and proteins. Your brain, muscles, and every cell need glucose to function.

But large amounts of glucose can cause serious harm. Sugar, in excess, can kill nerves, erode kidneys, damage the heart, cause blindness. and encourage infections.

This is why people with poorly controlled diabetes, who have elevated blood sugars, are at high risk for heart attacks, stroke, blindness, and amputations due to foot infec-

Glucose in excess also leads to obesity because the body takes extra sugar and turns it into a fat, called a triglyceride, for storage in fat cells. Most people are surprised to learn that eating fat does not make us fat; rather sugar makes us fat.

For this reason, many people turn to artificial sweeteners and alternate sweeteners to reduce the amount of consuming any extra calories. In fact, many artificial sweeteners are referred to as non-nutritive sweeteners. They provide a sweet taste, but have no nutritional value. Most diet or low-calorie foods and beverages contain artificial sweeteners includ-

OFF THEY GO - Five SeaDoo riders and one cameraman riding shotgun are on their way from Teller to the NorthWest Passage, leaving Grantley Harbor on Saturday, July 14.

Adventurers change plans after being kicked out of Russia

By Diana Haecker

The beach at Grantley Harbor was more crowded than usual as a group of Teller children excitedly surrounded five SeaDoo personal watercraft and six wetsuit-clad riders on Saturday afternoon. While the kids were concerned with the 11-foot SeaDoos drifting into a nearby fishnet, the riders were focused on getting their last minute preparations taken care of.

This group of six adventurers got ready to take off on a long journey that would take them north, past Wales, Shishmaref, Barrow, the Northwest Passage and maybe eventually to Resolute Bay on the other side of the continent. That's the ultimate goal for now, but ask them, and they will tell you that plans can change fast.

The six men are hailing from Alaska, Idaho and California and are filming their exploits for a self-produced reality TV show called "Dangerous Waters," which currently airs on GCI channels. They plan to take their SeaDoos around the world, and have seen some of it already from the backs of their personal water craft.

Their plan was to cross the Bering Strait, move down the Asian coast to Japan and Taiwan. But when they rode their SeaDoos from Wales over the Bering Strait to Lavrentiya, they were not welcomed with open arms but rather by armed soldiers riding a Russian military tank.

Last year the adventurers rode their SeaDoos from Seattle to South-central Alaska and, due to too rough of waters, had the machines flown in from Bristol Bay to Nome.

A few weeks ago, they wanted to continue their journey and departed Nome via Teller and Wales with what they thought complete paperwork, to cross the Bering Strait. After 12 hours on rough water, battling 10foot waves, 30 to 40-knot winds and disorienting fog, they made it to the other side. "So, here we come, five SeaDoos with lights on late at night, coming out of the fog toward Russia, so yeah, I guess we caught them by surprise," said Charles Davis, mechanic and one of the SeaDoo pilots. Then suddenly out of nowhere came a tank rolling on the beach and six or so Russian soldiers with guns. Little did the Americans know, as they ended up near the military installation at Lavrentiya and the Russians there don't take kindly to unannounced visits from the East. "They tied our skies up, left armed guards with them," Davis continued. "They loaded us up on the tank and took us back to the military base where we were, hmm, I would say not interrogated, but questioned.'

Davis said that they thought they had all their paperwork and visa in order, but they were missing special permissions and an invitation that is specific to travels to that region. "We were stuck in a small work out gym, with armed guards, for about four days. They let us go when they realized that we weren't spies," Davis said

After the six paid fines, the hospitality improved and they were taken around to the local museum, bought gas to refuel their SeaDoos and were sent back to the U.S.A. A helicopter escorted them to the International Date Line and this time, the forces of nature were merciful and granted them a smooth, sunny ride to Wales.

From there, they went on to Teller, left their machines there and rode the EZ cab to Nome on July 11.

At the Aurora Inn, they regrouped and drew up a new plan. Hey, if we can't go to Russia, Japan and on to Taiwan, let's go up north. Within a few days, they took care of logistics, organized fuel stops along the way towards the Pacific via the Northwest Passage.

In way of explaining their motivation, Wesley Davis, cameraman and "navigator", said: "It's something we love to do."

The rest of the crew consists of Andrew Mazella from Alaska, camera man; Steve Moll of California, star of the show, "commandant" and owner of Dangerous Waters Productions; Patrick McGregor of Boise, Idaho, medic; and Trevor Hudson of California, main camera man.

On Saturday, the six took off from Teller, putting on quite a show for the assembled crowd. Just as soon as the waves they made subsided, the kids grabbed their fishing rods and continued fishing or toying with a black hat, left behind on the beach.

GETTING READY—The SeaDoo adventurers pack about 33 gallons of fuel in addition to the 16 gallons that fit in their tanks per trip. They said the range of gas mileage depends on ocean conditions and a tank gets them between 150 and 200 miles far.

According to a recent report by the American Heart Association and the American Diabetes Association, artificial sweeteners may be helpful to a person who is carefully monitoring his or her intake of sugar, but there is no strong evidence that diet foods containing artificial sweeteners are in fact healthy.

Most of what we have learned comes from studies of diet sodas. In general, the consumption of beverages that contain artificial sweeteners is not associated with improved health. In fact, in many cases people who consume beverages with artificial sweeteners have a higher risk for health problems.

Daily consumers of diet soda have a higher risk of developing cardiovascular disease compared to people who either drink no soda, people who drink regular soda, or those who drink less than a can of diet soda daily.

People who eat healthy and do not drink diet beverages maintain a healthier waistline compared to everyone else including people who eat a healthy diet and do drink diet

Diet beverages have been found to increase, not decrease the risk of diabetes. Women who drink diet soda are at greater risk of bone loss than non-consumers. And diet soda consumption in excess is associated with a form of fatty liver disease similar to what occurs in alcoholic patients. The extent to which artificial sweetener in the soda contributes to these risks is unclear.

Also unclear is whether or not artificial sweeteners actually lead to reduced calorie consumption overall. A hamburger and French fries does not mysteriously become lower in calories when it is washed down with a diet soda. In fact, a person may actually eat more fries to replace the calories absent in the diet soda. Artificial sweeteners can trick the taste buds, but MRI studies suggest the brain is not fooled. Pleasure centers of the brain remain unsatisfied until real glucose enters the system. Therefore, people who consume artificial sweeteners tend to consume calories, often more calories than needed, in other forms.

Natural sweeteners, like honey or agave, come from real foods and may provide a healthy alternative to artificial sweeteners. Natural sweeteners contain calories, but because they tend to be more concentrated, a person is likely to use a smaller amount to get the same taste and therefore consume fewer calories overall. For example, putting half a teaspoon of honey (32 calories) in a cup of hot tea instead of a full teaspoon of table sugar (46 calories) would be a better choice if someone were trying to reduce calorie intake.

The natural sweeteners are generally more nutritious than straight table sugar. Honey, for example, provides glucose, but unlike plain sugar, honey also contains antioxidants, vitamins, and minerals.

For good health, fruits and vegetables should be the primary source of glucose in the diet. When added sugar is used, as in making a sweet beverage or baking a dessert, the American Heart Association recommends no more than 100 calories a day from added sugar for most women and no more than 150 calories a day for most men. That is roughly 6 teaspoons of added sugar for women and 9 teaspoons for men. For reference, a 12 ounce can of pop has about 10 teaspoons of sugar.

People may be inclined to think that unhealthy foods can be made healthy by removing calories and sugars. While artificial sweeteners are considered safe, being safe does not mean they improve your health. The bottom line is that your body needs two substances to be healthy: oxygen and glucose. Artificial anything is, by definition, a poor substitute for the real thing, and in moderation, real sugar found in real food is what makes us truly healthy. The key is moderation.

Obituary for Raymond Charles "Cameron" Mixsooke

Raymond Charles "Cameron" Mixsooke, 26, of Kenai, Alaska died on Thursday, July 5, in Baltimore, Maryland, as he was returning to Alaska after a six month deployment

Raymond Charles "Cameron" Mixsooke

in Kuwait. Cameron was born on October 12, 1985 in Anchorage, to Reuben and Sharon Mixsooke, joining his older siblings, Max and Janice. He helped welcome his younger brother, Clayton, a year later. Eight years later another brother, Nilson, joined the family. Later Cameron helped welcome two more siblings. Shawn and Chaleen, whom he loved

He grew up in the Inupiaq village of Unalakleet in Western Alaska. He attended Unalakleet Schools and then enrolled in Mt. Edgecombe High School in Sitka. He participated in wrestling, basketball and enjoyed snowboarding. In 1999, he won the fastest pin and the 132 lb. weight class. Following graduation, Mixsooke attended Alaska Christian College in Soldotna.

Senior Airman Mixsooke was a member of the Alaska Air Guard's 176th Civil Engineer Squadron. He joined the Alaska Air Guard in 2007 and had previously served in the Alaska Army National Guard's 3rd Battalion, 297th Infantry for three years, from 2004-2007.

Mixsooke worked for Grant Aviation in Kenai. As a young child, Cameron loved the outdoors and going fishing with his dad and siblings, Janice, Max and Clayton. One summer, his dad took Cameron, Janice, Max and Clayton fishing on the Unalakleet River. Reuben had just bought the children new fishing rods and reels. Cameron cast a couple of times and the third time he accidentally threw his rod in the water; they all just stood there surprised. After that his siblings shared their rods with Cameron.

When he was a young child, Cameron's dad gave him the nickname "pretty boy", which eventually wore off in school. Another passion in his life growing up was Covenant Bible Camp on the North River in Unalakleet. Every summer, Cameron looked forward to being involved in the Lord's work at camp, learning about the Lord and meeting new friends. Cameron is most remembered by family and friends for his great smile, sense of humor and his thoughtful, loving, caring, and giving heart.

You were a man of God, a soldier of freedom and a great friend to all," one friend said. Cameron loved the people of Sitka, Soldotna and Kenai and considered these places home. The family from Unalakleet says, "We are deeply grateful to the people Cameron knew and loved for loving him and Samantha, his wife of nine months. Thank you Samantha, for loving our son so dearly. Thank you all for the prayers, love and support you have shown to the family in Unalakleet, and to Samantha in Kenai. The many phone calls, food and financial support have meant so much. Thank you to the military for helping the family and Samantha with all the arrangements. Thanks also go to Grant Aviation for providing travel for the family to attend the memorial in Kenai.'

Cameron is survived by his wife Samantha (Kenai); his parents, Reuben and Sharon Mixsooke (Unalakleet); siblings Max (Anchorage); Janice (Nome); Clayton (Unalakleet): Janice and Jim (Illinois): Nilson (Unalakleet); Toni and family (Wasilla): Daniel (Florida) and numerous aunts, uncles, cousins, nieces and nephews.

Cameron, beloved husband, son, brother, uncle, nephew, cousin and friend, we love you with all of our hearts. You will be missed and never forgotten. A funeral service and interment took place in Unalakleet and a memorial service July 15, at Peninsula Grace Brethren Church, in Soldotna (Mile 19.5). A reception with light refreshments followed the service.

Beware of the little things

Pastor Mike Christian Jr. River of Life Assembly of God A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Catch for us the foxes, the little foxes that ruin the vineyard, our vineyards that are in bloom." (Song of Solomon 2:15)

Little things can mess up your life. Robert Romano of Staten Island, New York, was driving home from work early one day when he came to a deserted intersection. As he entered the intersection, his car ran over a small nail in the road and his tire blew out. Romano lost control and the car hit a street lamp. The impact bent over the pole and the car careened down the street towards a fire hydrant, snapping it off and causing flooding under the street.

The massive deluge of water soon undermined the entire intersection which collapsed, leaving a 50-foot crater in the street. The cave-in ruptured a gas main and police officers in hip-waders had to evacuate 17 nearby residents to safety.

How interesting that one little misplaced nail should cause such an awesome series of events!

In the Word of God it says, "As dead flies give perfume a bad smell, so a little folly (foolishness) outweighs wisdom and honor" (Eccl. 10:1 NIV).

If you want to be a success you have to constantly be on guard concerning the "Little Things.

Here are a few "Little Things" to watch:

- 1. Beware of Hard Feelings. If someone has a grudge against you or refuses to respond warmly to you, it's best to be sincere and forthright in asking them why they appear to be offended.
- 2. Beware of Bad Habits. Ask your close friends and loved ones what annoys them most about you, they'll probably be honest enough to tell you. Then, try your best to change in those areas
- 3. Beware of Unfinished Business. The best time to do something is when you think of it. If you can't do it then, write it down on a notepad or sticky note so you won't forget it. Unfinished business has a way of finishing you off as far as credibility is concerned. A famous quote by Thomas Jefferson says it best: "Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today."

Remember: It's the little things that can really mess up your life! May the lord bless you!

Possible Overlap between the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area and Offshore Mining Lease ADL 17867

In 2011, after ADLs 17911, 17921, and 17867 were contracted into two, 1,000 acre lease tracts under ADL 17867, the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area (ADL 231171) was opened for mining. The new Public Mining Area occupies acreage that was formerly covered by the above mining leases. The West Nome Beach Public Mining Area was described in the Final Finding and Decision as extending 1/4 mile or 1,320 feet seaward from mean high tide. Due to the uncertain location of mean high tide, the western end of the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area as described in the Final Decision may slightly overlap the East Lease Tract of ADL 17867. The legal description of the East Lease Tract of ADL 17867 is given below.

Any overlap of the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area as described in the Final Finding and Decision is very small, no more than 2-3 acres. Depending on the precise location of mean high tide, there may be no overlap. In the event that there is an overlap, ADL 17867 was an existing lease at the time the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area was created. Therefore, the lease cannot be superseded by the Public Mining Area. The West Nome Beach Public Mining Area is adjacent to, rather than overlapping, ADL 17867. The public does not have rights to mine or otherwise recover minerals from ADL 17867. The holder of ADL 17867 may mark the boundary between ADL 17867 and the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area with buoys.

ADL 17867, East Tract Legal Description

ADL 17867 East Tract is located within Sections 27, 28, 29, 32, 33 & 34, T. 11S, R. 34W., Kateel River Meridian. Bearings are given as true mean bearings, distances are US Survey Foot. were transported to the Elim where they were released to family members

On July 12, at about 3:43 a.m., Nome AST was notified of an abandoned structure fire in Teller. The structure, which used to be a town store, was one of several on a block near the AVEC power plant and there was concern of the fire spreading not only to the other structures but also to the power plant. Nome Volunteer Fire Department responded with fire fighting equipment via chartered aircraft and got the fire under control but three structures were completely destroyed. Teller residents assisted with fire suppression efforts. One of the structures destroyed was occupied by the Mary's Igloo Traditional Council. The other two structures were not in use but had been used as storage for family belongings. Two other building across the street from where the fire standard were knocked down. from where the fire started were knocked down to prevent the fire spreading to those buildings, which are next to residential housing. No one was hurt in the incident and the cause of the fire was determined and suspects identified during AST's investigation. The investigation is on

CHIEF'S NOTES:

During the week from 7-9-12 thru 7-15-12, the Nome Police Department responded to 20 calls in-volving intoxicated persons who were either re-ported to be unable to take care of themselves or who had been injured and in need of aid. Many of who had been injured and in need of alc. Many of these people were located during routine foot patrols conducted by officers; while others were reported by concerned citizens. Though the weather is generally more tolerable during this time of year and there is less fear of someone dying due to exposure, many of the people that are chronic ine-briates have underlying medical conditions that are aggravated by the high levels of alcohol con-sumption. If you happen to see a person 'down' please don't hesitate to call as the person could be experiencing a medical emergency such as diabetic coma, stroke or cardiac issues

In the same manner, State law prohibits people from being 'drunken' on licensed premises. The distinction between drunken and 'intoxicated' is indicearly belimited, but a person with a drainer will generally show signs of gross intoxication: extremely slurred speech; the inability to focus (vision); swaying while standing or inability to stand without support; staggering while walking; falling saleep; disorientation to place, time or circumstances; and a host of other signs of gross intoxication. It is also against the law for licensed establishments (liquor stores, bars and restaurants) to serve or continue to serve persons who are clearly intoxicated. If you should see someone who is 'drunk' in a licensed premises; a grossly in-toxicated person being served/sold alcoholic bev-erages at a licensed premises; or a grossly intoxicated person purchasing alcohol at a liquor store; please notify NPD immediately so we can take appropriate enforcement action.

not clearly defined, but a person who is drunken

Finally, the number of persons who are being arrested for Driving While Under the Influence has increased more than 300 percent as compared to this time last year and the number of persons contacted for Minor Consuming Alcohol has increased dramatically as well. If you are going out to drink, do not drive. The legal limit is .08 and most people have difficulty gauging their level of intoxication. The only way to avoid DUI is to not drink and drive. Additionally, if you see a minor drinking alcohol or an adult providing alcohol to a minor, please notify us immediately. Young people oftentimes become victims of assault, sexual assault and sexual abuse as they quickly become impaired from alcohol and have little tolerance to the effects of alcohol consumption. Again, we are asking for the help of the community in reducing the level of alcohol related trauma occurring in our community. Take a moment to call. We will respond as our resources allow. You may save a life today and guarantee a future for someone by your actions. The Nome Police can be reached at 443-5262. Thanks for your help in keeping our community safe.

AFTER THE BLAZE— The burned-down loader sits in a hole inside the taped-off area of the fire scene in Teller.

• Teller fire

Jim Stimpfle, who owns a place in Teller, saw three vehicles tearing away from the Teller Airport as he motored over a rise that overlooks the village around 4:30 a.m.

"I saw vehicles coming out of the airport drive at a time when you wouldn't expect any," he said during one of several calls during the fire. "Then I saw that Blodgett's store was on fire. The people roaring down the hill in front of me were about half a dozen Nome fire department people flown in by Bering Air."

NVFD also raced up the Nome Teller Highway with crews and equipment. More firefighters came around 7 p.m.

NVFD Chief Matt Johnson credited Teller's local residents with helping to control the fire.

Johnson told Radio KNOM: "We started out early with a real small crew and we had to work really hard and do a lot of stuff in a short period of time with a small group of people. I gotta hand it to the people of Teller too. The people that helped us out too...there were quite a few younger guys that were helping us move hoses around and equipment for us and everything else. They were trying."

ing."
The loader's wheels caught fire as Nome Volunteer firefighter Jim West Jr. used it to push debris into the fire. West told the story Monday.

"I was pushing debris into the fire so it wouldn't come back and spread. There was a four-foot hole in there I didn't expect," West recounted. "The right tire went into the hole. I slammed the bucket down and tried to push out. Then the engine died. I got it started and tried to push on the bucket again. The engine died again, that was it. I opted to bail. It was a close call.

"The wheels caught fire and people scattered. Then the diesel exploded," West said. 'I feel sorry about losing their loader."

West operated a smaller dozer and continued to push debris. We were using a technique called "surround and drown" the fire—contain the fire and drown it with water," he said. "Our water source was Grantley Harbor."

That the buildings were clad in tin

ing the blaze, West said.

"All the tin kept the heat inside, making it impossible for going inside to fight the fire," he said.

West also praised local people for helping with the emergency.

"They pitched right in, manned the hoses, and helped with the pumps. They did put in a good effort," West said. "When they don't have the training and the equipment like we have, it makes it hard for them."

Garnie praised the department in return. "If the Nome Volunteer Fire Department hadn't shown up, we were catastrophe bound," he said. "We could have lost the church, the power plant, all the buildings across the street and it could have gone into the housing."

Rain that started around 7 a.m. in Nome did not help the firefighters.

"It's a beautiful sunny day here," Stimpfle reported. That winds were light did help, Stimpfle thought.

"If it had been really windy, the fire would have taken out the buildings west of the fire, the new Norton Sound Health Corp. clinic, the new school, the new city office building," he said.

Mary's Igloo Traditional Council lost everything, including valuable records, according to Garnie. Despite attempts, Lucy Oquilluk of MITC could not be reached by email or phone Monday.

Garnie said the loader equipment was insured, but Teller needs replacement as soon as possible. "We're working on the insurance papers. We'd love to get it replaced before winter freeze up," he said. "It is essential for clearing a path for school bus runs and to keep the road open to the dump site. Without that open, it is not possible to pick up honey buckets [human waste receptacles]."

He talked to the offices of Sen. Mark Begich and Rep. Lisa Murkowski Monday, according to Garnie.

"We'll see if they can expedite the process of getting it before winter," he said.

The fire scene has been blocked with yellow tape as a crime scene. The state Fire Marshall's office is investigating the cause of the fire. On Monday troopers said the cause of the fire was determined and suspects identified. The investigation is ongoing VENTING THE SMOKE— NVFD volunteer John Bahnke III assists fire fighters inside the six-plex apartment building on 2nd Avenue. A smoldering electrical fire in the attic caused smoke to escape the building.

NVFD respond to attic fire

By Diana Haecker

The swift response of the Nome Volunteer Fire Department to a report of smoke escaping the roof may have saved the six-plex apartment building on 503 West 2nd Avenue.

On Monday, July 16, the fire department was called out in the late morning when smoke came out of the soffits of the Bering Straits Regional Housing Authority Apartment

NVFD showed up with at least 15 volunteers and fanned out to tackle the smoke from inside as well as outside. All six apartments were evacuated. The occupant of the top apartment, John Hager, said he noticed that something was wrong when he took a shower in the morning, looked up to the ceiling and saw the wall paint blow bubbles. Hager last year lost his house to a fire. He evacuated his apartment and stood outside with other occupants and neighbors, watching fire volunteers work on containing the fire.

Jerry Steiger with NVFD said it appears that an electrical fire of a faulty attic fan caused the smoke.

The smoldering was contained with water as fire fighters brought a hose inside the house and up to the attic, as a ventilation crew worked from the outside. Jerry Steiger extended Fire Engine 9's ladder and Johnny Bahnke III climbed up to help create an opening into the attic. From the inside, fire fighters busted through the wall to ventilate the attic.

Nobody was injured and the building suffered no structural damage.

BSRHA is repairing minor water damage to the upstairs apartment.

Council, NJUS kick-start low-cost energy search

By Sandra L. Medearis

Cheap energy for Nome? Who knows how or where to get it?

The officials elected to run the City and facilitate quality of life say a solution has to be found for energy costs as high as a cat's back or Nome will end up a ghost town, bereft of year around residents.

"People are leaving. Look at Kotzebue. All those people that work at Red Dog are living in the [Matanuska-Susitna] Valley. No one is living in Kotzebue anymore, unless they are on public assistance," Carl Emmons, utility board member, said. "If you want a job, you have to go somewhere else, so they are going to Red Dog, but they have to live elsewhere.'

"The same thing is going on here," he continued. "People can't afford to stay here anymore. We are rapidly turning into a community of little birds with our mouths open waiting for the federal government to put something in it. Everybody is going to move to Anchorage, Fairbanks or Arizona and come back here for fish camp. Rural Alaska is just going to become a fish camp basically ...a hunting and fishing camp for the Railbelt.'

This summer, numerous weekend garage sales by people preparing to move elsewhere have become the community Craig's List for buying second-hand goods. Residents who grew up here are leaving.

The Council hired Berkowitz as a consultant to ferret out possibilities in new energy sources to ease the high cost of energy in the Nome area—natural gas, coal, wave mechanics, geothermalwhere heating fuel costs $6 a gallon and is expected to go up again soon after the season's barge deliveries.

Berkowitz has a contract for two years at $3,000 per month. New on the job, Berkowitz had yet to dig into his homework on real-time suggestions for energy relief at a work session with Nome Common Council members and the utility board June

"What I consider energy means for a community, what low-cost energy is all about - I look at it in broader terms than simply bringing low cost energy to the families and businesses that operate here," Berkowitz said. "Low cost energy is about economic development. It is about economic opportunity. It is about quality of life for people.

"I tend to look at what sort of policies you want to implement, what sort of programs you want to implement in that context. I've always considered when you import a dollar's worth of diesel you're exporting a dollar's and you're exporting a job. The more a community can do to produce energy locally the more control it has over its economic future and the quality of life for its people," he said.

Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. Chief Matt Johnson assured the Nome Common Council meeting in regular session Monday night that providing 10 firefighters to fight a major fire in Teller village north of Nome had not left Nome itself defenseless. Ten firefighters went to Teller with equipment by air and vehicle, but 20 members of the department remained in town.

Johnson applauded the firefighters and department for fast response and tenacity in fighting the fire that destroyed four buildings in Teller early July 12. He wanted the Council to understand how dedicated and relentless this fire department is, he said. "Having been notified by Alaska State Troopers, we were within 45 minutes in an airplane wheels up and in Teller in 30 minutes where we were faced with a massive fire," Johnson said.

"If you'd had a fire of that magnitude in the Lower 48, there would have been at least 150 firefighters. We did it with 10.'

"I think if we hadn't gotten up there, Teller would have ceased to exist" Johnson told the Council.

City Manager Josie Bahnke commended the NVFD for bravery and a job well done. Five firefighters went to Teller by chartered airplane with

Troopers collar kids in Teller fire investigation

By Sandra L. Medearis

Troopers have identified a pair of suspects, both minors, in a fire that leveled four buildings in Teller early July 12.

Troopers would refer charges to the state juvenile justice system this week, according to Megan Peters, AST spokeswoman

The fire burned four buildings owned by the Blodgett family— the former village store, Teller Commercial Co., closed for over a decade, and two adjoining unused buildings except for storage for family belongings. Additionally, a building occupied by the offices of Mary's Igloo Traditional Council fell to ashes for a total loss.

Troopers say the fire started on the second floor of one of the buildings. Villagers report, unconfirmed, that kids were playing in the building prior to the fire with cigarette

The fire started in the store and moved from building to building, threatening the Alaska Village Electric Coop power plant and new clinic down the way, as well as Teller Catholic Church across the street. Firefighters from Nome Volunteer Fire Dept. took equipment and personnel to the village on Grantley Harbor by chartered aircraft and ve-

With the help of local people, they contained the fire with seawater and other defensive moves. City employee Albert Oquilluk moved containers and other potential kindling with the Cat and with the front-end loader.

Firefighter Jim West Jr. helped push debris back into the fire and also took down two buildings across the street to remove tinder that could have let the fire spread into housing nearby, he said.

The loader was later lost when a wheel became stuck in a utility recess and the machine caught fire and fuel exploded.

There were no injuries.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. had funded purchase of the loader for the village in 2007, Joe Garnie, city official said. The loader had been insured, Garnie said, and he was working with the insurance company this week to get reimbursement before the snow flies.

Use of the loader was vital for clearing streets for sanitation control and school bus routes, Garnie said. He said there were ongoing discussions with NSEDC that if no replacement were in sight by freeze-up and snow time, that Teller could use another loader that NSEDC has at the fish plant.

The burned building debris was still taped off over the past weekend, pending completion of the investigation by state fire marshal staff, according to Luann Noffsker, executrix of the Richard Blodgett estate.

Garnie said not only did Teller not own equipment for clearing the debris, but also that health and safety issues prevented the city from just jumping in immediately. "We have only one small dump truck," Garnie said, "and we don't know what the liabilities and health hazards are.'

Letters

Dear Nancy,

This letter is to The Nome Nugget as a concern of the public regarding NPD's slow response to a theft of a "local" guy getting robbed of his money and other belongings. The first call made to NPD was around 7:05 a.m., second call was around 8:20 a.m. It's now 9:21 a.m. and NO show. 10 a.m. finally talking to the victim. Yet...Nome is not ready to handle the overflow of people either local, miners or construction crew of roads and hospital. All people deserve respect and cooperation of NPD when called.

Thanks, Rachel Menadelook Nome

When Alaska's economy collapsed in 1986, there wasn't a single spec home built in Anchorage for six years. Apartments and condos didn't resume in quantity for twelve. That's typical of how long it takes for economies to turn around. When Bush took office, thanks to eight years of Clinton's policies, the nation had a balanced budget and a thriving economy. Seven years into Bush's new policies unemployment was rising at a record rate. By the end of Bushes eighth year, according to http://zfacts.com/node/319 the nation was losing a historical never before seen 800,000 Jobs every month.

Obama's stimulus package, the package Republicans say didn't work, reversed the rising unemployment the month following its passage. Within a year, the nation's job hemorrhage had shrunk to zero. The number of American jobs has been slowly climbing ever since.

Obama's biggest mistake was underestimating how long the economy would take to fully recover.

If Romney is elected, he will reembrace Bushes policies and finish steering America's economy over the economic cliff George Bush almost sent us over.

After the ice breakup in the spring of 1982 the barge carrying supplies to Nome also contained the mining equipment for the first Gold Prospectors Association of America Alaska Exposition. It all started from a bull session at Italian Bar gold mining sation got around to the gold found in Alaska. I commented that I always wanted to go to Alaska and George Buzzard Massie, the president and founder of the Gold Prospectors Association of America said that we should come up with a gold mining trip. Well, that statement brought on the selection of the crew that would take the club's first gold mining trip to Nome Alaska. The gold rush of 1982, which took over 100 gold miners out on the tundra at a camp on the Casa Degage River by way of the Alaska air Lines flight from Anchorage to Nome. The feat of moving some eight tons of supplies consisting of mining gear, building material, food, fuel, clothes and bed rolls up the Salmon River then out the corduroy road to the camp site. We got lucky when Blue Berry John, the bus driver offered to haul the miners out to the Salmon River where they had to walk the rest of the way to camp.

Let me tell you the city of Nome has certainly changed from those days when one walked o board walks and crossed a muddy street wile three wheelers buzzed all over town and there were always something going on day and night. Night? It ever got dark! This is when we learned about The Day of the Midnight Sun Celebration. The Massie gang was the ones who robbed the bank, ran down Main Street and got caught, was found guilty and put in jail.

We were always welcomed to the restraints, shops and bars but my fond memory of the Show House Restraint with the Front Street Follies and the girls that I preformed with. The polar cub Café', The Board of Trade Solon with Jim West and his Ivory Shop, The Safety Road House, Maruskiya's Eskimo Artifacts Shop, the Polaris club and soo many others that supplied us with their services. Bob, the chief of police, his dispatcher Ruthie, BJ from Alaska Air Lines, Mississippi the electrician, the Glue Pot, the Masonic Lodge, The rotary Club, the Booshu's, Ambros, Fat Freddy's and the waitress that showed off her panties, Aaron Burmeister who ran the 1994 Iditarod carrying my 44 magnum pistol, Clowning in the Forth of July parade, and so many others who played a part in the thirty years that the Gold Prospectors Association of America Nome Exposition has each summer been coming to Nome to mine the beaches.

WE all regret the passing of George Buzzard Massie, the founder of the G.P.A.A. and his brilliance that brought about the club's existence in Nome and we pray to have many more years here in the city of Nome Alaska. God bless you all.

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to continue "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget Newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he lugged his 20 pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk Rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954, however his thoughts, memories and love legacy in the "McDaniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. If it ever rains, stop by Nome's Museum located to the west of the BOT.

In the last issue of the Nome Nugget Newspaper, the brothers Wilfred and Ed dealt with the tragic death of their fellow miner Ed Rouse who is still buried in Nome. It's starting to get darker at night as the Midnight Sun begins to wane. Now it's time for some weather to set in ...

July 29, 1900

Today is Sunday and we are laying off. I made some bread and a pudding today. We will set the boxes and start work in the morning. We set our boxes and are ready for work tomorrow. A man who said he was a lawyer stopped here and said that the marshall told him that the soldiers were coming up the beach and arrest everyone at work. He said he was defending a man who was arrested and he was getting all the names of the beach miners. If we are all arrested there'll be a hot time in the old town tomorrow night, my honey.

July 31, 1900

Al staid with us all night. No hard trouble again with our pump. The sea is rough and the surf is full of sea moss. It gets into the pump runner and clogs it up. Ed went to a miner's meeting this afternoon. Lots of talk about the beach. We worked until 9:15 PM. The water jacket on the engine became clogged with sand and moss so that we had to stop.

August 1, 1900

All the pumping plants are stopped today as there is a rumor that we are all to be arrested today. We took our boxes down and cleaned up. The weather is getting very stormy and the sea is getting rough. We took supper with Al Raney.

Looking around Nome, Berkowitz said, he saw tremendous opportunities—Pilgrim Hot Springs, offshore gas and all sorts of potential

"There's what people like to call 'negawatts,' which is reduction in consumption, conservation efforts. All that can occur. The rule I'm going to have is to try and assist people in this room and those who aren't here to make sure those plans come to fruition because I want to see Nome be much more energy self-sufficient," Berkowitz told the assembly at Nome City Hall.

Get some concrete answers, Councilwoman Mary Knodel said.

"What I want to know is how we are going to go about this," she said. "People are leaving town left and right, because they can't afford to live here any more because of the cost of fuel and the cost of electricity. I know we have a million plans and a million things have been written. Now, how do we get down to the meat of it and get going. We all know there's gas out here and we read these things. Where do we go to get the money that's what I want to know? I want to know what the road map looks like."

There are different time horizons for different aspects of what can happen. I think the fastest recipe for saving money and reducing cost is through conservation efforts," Berkowitz said. "A lot of those efforts have gotten under way. We need to make sure we are monitoring those efforts correctly to continue to push them. Specific proposals that I'd like to see incorporated in Nome's energy are future things like smart gridding where you can have a better model of what the energy use profile is so that when John [Handeland, utility manager] is running all the power facilities, he knows when the load spikes, when they're down so he doesn't have to keep things online unnecessarily."

In the long-term future Nome had to produce its own energy, Berkowitz said. "There's no way around that. That's why Pilgrim Hot Springs [geothermal] is such an attractive possibility. That's a significant amount of energy. You can't sustain communities at 30 to 40 cents a kilowatt."

When the state budget gets tight, power cost assistance is going to be in trouble, he said.

He mentioned process ships that could take gas from Norton Sound and turn it into a diesel equivalent, a possibility that could provide relief in the long term. However, Berkowitz said, near-term solutions call for increased efficiency and conservation.

Knodel was past turning out lights and turning down the thermostat.

"I understand the smart grid and I understand the customer conserving," Knodel said. "I'm more concerned with the long-term development. I think that is what we were looking for. Correct me if I'm wrong. What we're looking for is some direction and some assistance in getting to those long-term solutions in a hurry. That's what we talked about in November. The rest of it is all fine and good, but we need to get to a solution and in a hurry, because we can't afford to live here."

Mayor Denise Michels suggested that Nome could use some of the technology floating by on resource development ships on the way to northern seas. "There are ships that are capable of doing testing and sonar because they are going north to do the same thing for oil and gas on the North Slope, she said. "Permitting may take a couple of years, but we know for the next four years there are ships with equipment we need to do studies will pass by us, so what does it take for us to get to the point where we get the studies to get the permitting to see if [natural gas] is a viable option.'

Studies have been done in the 1970s and 1980s on offshore natural gas and how much it would cost to develop, but further studies are required for permitting.

Nome's two 900-kilowatt wind turbines that Nome Joint Utilities System plans to put up next summer are the fastest move Nome can make, Berkowitz said, to show that Nome is willing to make its own effort to solve problems, which creates a good atmosphere for seeking funding.

"It's a power source that you know about and a power source that's going to displace maybe a quarter of the fuel costs that exist."

Emmons made the point that NJUS and current kilowatt prices could not survive a loss of customers and diminished revenue.

"Along the avenue of conservation back in the 70s when we had the first oil crunch, everybody bought wood stoves and actually drove the price of fuel up, because the distributor lost all of his customers," Emmons said. "We are a very small community. We can conserve up to a point where the costs of the powerhouse are still going to be there. If we lose customers to the powerhouse, the price of electricity is going to go up."

Developing natural gas in northwest Alaska could supply Kotzebue and Unalakleet, points in between, and further. Gas takes less refining than oil, Emmons said. The gas could go to the powerhouse, because the electrical distribution is already in place, rather than run the gas to homes, making cooking and heating with electric power feasible.

"We could pay our linemen instead of the Arabs for oil," Emmons said

"If you use all these renewable resources to drive down the cost of energy, then you can present yourselves as Nome, a city that really has taken all the efforts it can to use renewable resources so that when you do mining activities which has a PR pushback you can say, 'Look we are doing the responsible thing," Berkowitz said. "The energy that is going to be coming from that is going to be green energy. That is a very strong way of promoting economic development. The part I can play is to be eyes and ears in different places, because I am plugged into energy conversations. I can help steer things, but the impetus for doing all this comes from Nome," Berkowitz said. "You've got to take care of yourself. No one else is going to do it for you."

In other business at the work session, Council and utility board heard a presentation from Gwen Holdman, director of Alaska Center for Energy and Power, concerning exploratory work at Pilgrim Hot Springs. The City has long eyed geothermal development at the site, around 45 miles from Nome.

The work comprises using remote sensing equipment to determine how much heat is available for development and the exact source of the hot water. The team is backing up the new technology with drilling and sampling.

"We want to find out where that hot water is coming from and we want to see what is available for power generation.

The potential looks good, as Pilgrim Hot Springs is the hottest spring on mainland Alaska excluding the Aleutian Islands, and bigger than Chena Hot Springs where that heat is generating electricity," Holdman

About 20 people associated with a number of agencies—U.S. Geological Survey from Denver, Dept. of Energy, Alaska Energy Authority and others are running the project on $3.6 million from the Dept. of Energy and $1.7 million from the Alaska Energy Authority. Holdman anticipates a report available this winter. Then the current project will be done. Any work on future development would be a completely separate project, according to Holdman.

"Our objective with the current project is to get good information for the property owners so they can make good decisions on development and to provide information on what has been done in other places," she said. "For example, there have been some interesting options for development in such places as Iceland and Chena Hot Springs. There are a lot of models you can follow for developing a geothermal system."

While the hot water is there for use directly or for power generation, a major cost factor is the distance from Nome and the expense of running a transmission line.

"Numbers of $20 to $40 million have been thrown out," Holdman said, as costs of getting the energy to the Nome area.

According to state labor economist Neal Fried in Alaska Economic Trends, fresh off the press, energy prices played a starring role in 2011's rise in inflation. Even in Anchorage, the cost of energy went up almost 11 percent from 2010 to 2011 on the Anchorage Consumer Price Index. Anchorage gasoline prices, a factor in the energy cost zoomed upward by almost 16 percent in the Anchorage Consumer Price Index.

It is no secret that Nome consumers also take a beating at grocery check stands, where partly attributed to transportation energy costs, they pay 226 percent of the Anchorage grocery prices, or more than double.

Interestingly, Nome was not mentioned in an Alaska Fuel Price Report published for January 2012 by the state Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. A survey of prices in 100 selected communities did not include Nome.

Although the survey was not mentioned in the energy work session, the omission was echoed when several attending the session said that Nome would have to push its own energy cost needs.

Berkowitz served in Alaska's House of Representatives from 1997 to 2006 and was Democratic minority leader for eight years. He founded an alternative energy company.

Voter registration deadline is Sunday

Voters have until Sunday, July 29 to register to vote in the August 28 primary election. Sunday is the deadline to register to vote, to update voter registration, or to change political party affiliation for voting in the Primary election.

The Division of Elections regional office in Nome will be open this weekend to assist voters. Offices will open on Saturday, July 28 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Sunday, July 29 from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m. for voter registration. The Division of Elections also accepts voter registration applications submitted by mail, fax or email.

Voter registration applications are available at the Division of Elections regional Nome office in the state office building, at City Hall and registration applications are also available at the Division of Elections website at www.elections.alaska.gov.

Port panel considers template for expansion design stage:

By Sandra L. Medearis

At its meeting on July 19, the Nome Port Commission received a draft Nome Port and Harbor Development Plan. Its author, port consultant Paul Fuhs, attending via telephone, took the commission through the 19-page document.

The roadmap is necessary for seeking state and federal funding for port expansion and upgrades.

The draft contains a planning sequence, short-, medium- and long-term development options and advocates strategies to attract customers to the port:

- Strategies to attract tourists to the port.
- Strategies to market Nome as a hub for fisheries and other research efforts in the Arctic.
 - Strategies for increasing vitality of the harbo

- Strategies for staging for oil exploration and drilling in the Chukchi Sea.
- Strategies for security measures. The Port of Nome this summer is busy with construction preparation as it does with construction activities. Construction-ready projects for summer 2012 include:

- High mast lighting and electrical line upgrade project to put two high mast lights on the causeway and a foundation for a third. Total cost: $833.136.
 - Snake River bridge replacement.
- Harbor floats and anchor system project to remove failed piling and replace it with an anchor chain system. The cost, $177,000.

Three additional projects are bidready:

- East and south dock fender repair and replacement.
- Repair for the sagging barge ramp.
- Federal authorization to regularly dredge the small boat harbor. Four projects are at the 35 percent
- Extension of the Nome Port Causeway to become a deep-water port at a depth of 35 feet.
- Causeway middle dock construction—meaning 476 ft. of sheet pile between City and Westgold docks. The cost would be around $13.5 million.
- Barge high ramp, a project that would install a 35 ft. wide sheet pile dock with a loading ramp. The cost: $3 million.
- Snake River floats and moorage expansion project would dredge out 80,000 cubic yd. of river bank and install two 600-ft. float sections. The cost, $13.7 million.

Fuhs emphasized that uplands development was critical, especially the Air Force tank farm area and two acres by the barge ramp.

"Stay on getting the tank farm property," Fuhs said. "That is going to be extremely valuable."

Once again, Fuhs emphasized that Port Clarence was also being considered as a deep-water port where little dredging would be needed and it was not exposed to weather, but on the other hand, had zero infrastructure compared to Port of Nome. The two locations—Port Clarence and Port of Nome could complement each other, he suggested.

Once again, Fuhs advocated connecting with Teller and Brevig Mission to see if they wanted to have a joint effort for a port authority.

"If the arctic port is moving that direction, Nome wants to be a part of that," Fuhs told the Nome port panel.

In other business, the commission looked over a letter that Mayor Denise Michels had written to U.S.

Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo of USCG District 17, to pull a Coast Guard foot into the door as part of an ongoing campaign for U.S. Coast Guard to establish a presence in Port of Nome.

Michels requested the USCG to consider staffing personnel in Nome for one week per month during summer months to provide water safety education and enforcement. Currently the USCG participates in public meetings and has scheduled one visit in Nome for education and enforcement.

The City of Nome has been collaborating with the Coast Guard to assess what the City has to offer and to identify USCG needs for support in an attempt to get a Coast Guard presence in Nome.

In her letter, the mayor woos the Coast Guard with an offer of office space in the harbormaster's office and informs Ostebo that Port of Nome has land available for Coast Guard use for equipment required to operate successfully in the Nome

Johnson: Paul Kosto, Jason West, Kevin Knowlton, Quinton Johnson and Timmy James. Later in the morning, Jerry Steiger, assistant chief, Jim West Jr., Chugie Farley and Will Gray drove to Teller with additional equipment.

In business at home, the Council unanimously approved awarding a contract to Charles J. Reader's Q Trucking Garage for repair and service on the City's heavy and specialty vehicles in the public works department.

The garage will get $90 an hour to work on the equipment, higher by $20 than the hourly charge set in 2010 for the previous bid period. For wrecker service, Q Trucking will get $25 per callout plus $3 a mile. Q Trucking will bill for parts at cost plus 25 percent.

The contract is for one year with a one-year renewal option.

The resolution, passed unanimously by the Council, said that Q Trucking submitted the only responsive bid. If there were other bids submitted in the sealed bid transaction, they were not included in the public document packet.

Delivering a vehicle to the Q Trucking repair department will require department head approval with repairs beyond usual maintenance in excess of $500 to be approved by the city manager or designee. The contract allows the City to order certain parts for specific vehicles for which the garage cannot charge for cost or 25 percent markup.

These vehicles include about 20 assorted vehicles dump trucks, dozers, various loaders and graders created by Caterpillar and a Volvo tracked loader skidsteer.

The Council unanimously passed another resolution that approved an increase to $8.3 million in a credit line from Wells Fargo bank for Nome Joint Utility System to finance fuel coming in by barge over the summer for running the utility's generators.

NJUS board of directors had to raise the line of credit from $8.1 million to $8.3 million to meet the rising diesel prices coming in on the season's barges, NJUS utility manager, John K. Handeland said. The $8.3 million would not cover the costs, but the utility would use its general fund, he said.

Diesel cost $2.80 per gallon around July 1, but by last Friday had gone up to $3.20," he said. "It's going south, or north, depending on how you look at it.

"This is not a good thing for the community. However, the average will still be within 15 cents of the price for last year," Handeland said.

City Manager Jose Bahnke asked the Council to consider a motion to authorize her to solicit proposals for a project manager for the pre-construction phase of the Richard Foster Building that will house the Carrie M. McLain Museum, Beringia Center for Culture and the Kegoayah Kozga Library. Such a manager would make final land acquisition, coordinate design, steering committee and contractors, prepare grant applications, obtain and monitor permits, oversee procurement and contracts and maintain the project budget.

"Put it out to bid," Councilman Louis Green Sr. advised.

Councilman Stan Andersen: "We'll digest it and take it up at the next meeting."

Bahnke reported to the Council

- Brooks Chandler, city attorney, had made final some changes to the sales tax ordinance coming up for Council vote with a work session for Council to go over changes with Chandler this week.
- architects and engineers had made final the specifications for a paint job on Old St. Joseph Church so that bid documents could go out with bid openings slated for August, after which weather would decide when the selected contractor would open the paint.

• State Dept. of Environmental Conservation and Bristol Engineering had inspected the landfill and monofill during a visit July 17-18 with a report coming to the Council in August.

Finally, the Council adjourned into executive session for "discussion of legal matters that may have an adverse impact on City finances." Joy Baker, harbormaster, remained for the executive session. The Nome Port Commission also attended the secret meeting: Randolph Romenesko, Jim West Jr., Charles Lean, Jimmy Adams, Jura Leahu.

Councilwomen Josie Stiles and Mary Knodel had excused absences from the Council meeting.
